themselves of some Sea-Towns, driving the Natives up higher into the Countrey. 3ly Jews, scattered and dispersed (as in other places) into all parts of it; 4ly Tartars; in those parts and Provinces which are under the Great Mongull; and 5ly Portuguese, who have many Colonies and Factories in the Ports and Islands, but brag as if they had made a conquest of all the Countrey. Which notwithstanding, considering that the Natural Indians are by far the greatest number, we must relate to them only in the Character which is made of this people. Affirmed to be tall of stature, strong of body, and of complexion inclining to that of the Negroes: of manners civil and ingenious, free from fraud in their dealings, and exact keepers of their words. The Common sort but meanly clad, for the most part naked; content with no more covering than to hide their shame. But those of greater Estates and Fortunes (as they have amongst them many ancient and Noble families) observe a majesty in both Sexes, both in their Attendants and Apparel; sweetening the salt with oyls, and perfumes, and adorning themselves with Jewels, Pearls, and other Ornaments befitting. They eat no flesh, but live on Barley, Rice, Milk, Honey, and other things without life.

The Women not of much fairer complexion than the men, yet of lovely countenances, wear their hair long and loose, but covered with a thin veil of Calicut Linn. Their ears hung with many rings, so great and heavy, that they are torn, and stretched to much disproportion; their noses also ringed, and behung with Jewels according to their estate and quality. Servilely obsequious to their husbands, whose affections they divide amongst them without jarre or jealousy: the men allowed here, as in all the East, the use of many wives, whom they buy of their Parents for a yoke of Oxen; and may marry as often as they list. In which they have too great a privilege above the women, who after the decease of their common husband, do either burn in the same flame with him, or else are forced to doom themselves to perpetual Widow-hood. But of this we may speak more hereafter, when we come to the particulars.

The Christian faith was first planted in these Countreys, by Saint Thomas, from whom the remainders of Christianity take denomination; and unto whom the Records and Miniments of that Church do ascribe their conversion. For in one of their Breviaries written in the Chaldean tongue, and translated into Latine by Father John Maria Campanin a Jesuite, we find it thus, Per D. Thomam evanuit error Idololatriæ ab Indis, &c. i. e. By Saint Thomas, the errors of Idolatry vanished out of the Indies; by Saint Thomas, they received the Sacrament of Baptism, and the Adoption of Sons; by Saint Thomas, they believed and confessed the Father, the Son, and Holy-Ghost; by Saint Thomas, they kept the iait received of one God; And finally by Saint Thomas, the splendour of saving doctrine did appear to all India. His body as they say, intombed in the City of Maliapur, upon the Coast of Choromandel; the truth of which tradition I dispute not here. But this plantation of the Gospel by the hand of Saint Thomas was not universal over all the Countrey; but in some parts and Provinces only: or else was forced to give ground a while to prevailing Heathenism. For in the reign of Constantine, we read how the Indians living on the further-side of the River Ganges (for so I understand the Indi interiores of my Author) were converted to the Faith by the ministry of one Frumentius, of the City of Tyre; who having spent the greatest part of his time amongst them, was employed in that service, and consecrated the first Bishop (for those Churches) by the great Athanasius of Alexandria. But being the foundation of this building was laid by Saint Thomas, the remainder of Christians here being, ascribe the whole work to him; called therefore Christians of Saint Thomas. Governed originally by their own Bishops, subordinate to an Archbishop of their own also, residing at Quag, male fifteen miles from Cochin; one of the chief Cities of this Countrey: who for a long time acknowledged obedience to the Patriarch of Adul, by the name of the Patriarch of Babylon, as by these Christians of India he is still termed. The number of the Christians computed at 15 or 16 thousand families; or at 70000 persons in the account of others: inhabiting for the most part in that large tract of ground, which beginning at the outlets of Indus and Ganges, stretcheth unto the Cape or Promontory called Cape Comari. The points wherein they differed from the Church of Rome, 1 Their administering the Sacrament of the Eucharist in bread seasoned with salt; 2 Administering in both kinds, but using instead of wine (which is scarce or not at all to be had in this Country) the juice of Raisins softened in water over night, and so pressed forth; 3 Not baptizing children untill 40 dayes old, except it be in danger of death; 4 Permitting no Images in their Churches, but that of the Cross; 5 Allowing one marriage to their Priests, but debarring the second; 6 In painting God with three heads on one body, to denote the Trinity; 7 Denying the use of extreme unction; and 8 Not acknowledging the Popes Supremacy: but besides these remainders of those ancient Christians, there are some others now of late of a new plantation, by the pains and travel of the Jesuites, though not with such success here, as they found in China: many of the Inhabitants partly by the diligence of the Arabians, and partly by the power of the great Mongull, having embraced Mahometanism; and being consequently less inclinable to admit the Gospel, than when they were in the condition of their natural Gentilism. Yet have they made such good progress in it, that Echelar the Mongul, not only founded a fair Church for the use of the Christians in the City of Agra (the Regal City of that Empire) but committed to the care of the Jesuites the education of two Princes of the Regal Family. And possibly they might have made a great increase of Christians before this time, had they not been opposed therein by Sultan Curroon, a bitter Enemy to their proceeding, in the reign of his Father, and no great favourer of their time. Insomuch that hearing a Jesuite, called Francisco Carst, report unto his Father how miraculously a wooden Cross of his had escaped the fire, he was very urgent with his Father to have a great fire presently made, and the same Cross to be thrown into it, upon these conditions, that if the Cross consumed not, his Father and himself would become Christians; but if it did, the Jesuite should be burned in the same fire with it. A fiery tryal which the poor Jesuite had much ado to put off off, and preserve his credit. Howsoever by their practising amongst the old Christians they have gained one point of very great consequence and importance to the Church of Rome. For in the year 1599, by the solicitation of the Jesuits and others, the Indian Christians renounced their obedience to the Patriarch of Mosul, and submitted their Churches to the Jurisdiction of the Pope of Rome, in a National Synod held at Linsamp, not far from Malinapur, by the Archbishop of Goa (the Primate of the Portugals in those parts) not only rejecting all opinions contrary to the Romish Tenets, but delivering all their Books and Liturgies to be altered and reformed by the said Archbishop, according to the Rites and Doctrines of the Church of Rome, which was done accordingly.

But these comparatively to the rest, come not to an haudfull; the main body of the People wallowing in their Gentilism; and still retaining many of those ancient Customs, which they used of old: as viz. 1 Not knowing their Wives after they have born them two children: 2 Nor keeping them, if after five years cohabitation, they can raise no issue by them, but then exchanging them for others: 3 Rewarding none for any military exploit, if they bring not with them in their hands the head of an enemy: 4 Killing their Friends, before they were withered or decayed by Age, or sickness. To these they have since added others of a later invention, perhaps more barbarous; of which we may have opportunity to speak anon. Their Priests or learned men, in the time of old were called Brachmanes from one Brachman, the prescriber of their Rites and Laws, by whom instructed in the Rudiments of their Philosophy; some of which, from their going naked, had the name of Gymnosophists; who were to them as the Chaldei to the Assyrians; the Magi, to the Persians; and the Druides, to the ancient Britans. Had in great Reverence by the People, and living for the most part an austere and solitary life, in Caves, and Deserts; feeding on herbs, poorly apparelled, and for a time abstaining from all carnal pleasures; but that time past, they may indulge themselves more liberty, and admit the company of women. Others of them live together with the common people, as being their ordinary Priests. Of these, the great Alexander, when he was in this Country surprized ten; one of them called by the name of Calanus, with whom he had a great deal of communication: propounding to him many strange questions, and receiving back to many of them, (as himself confessed) some not unsatisfying though strange answers. To these Gymnosophists, or Brachmans, the Bramines do now succeed, both in place and authority; but differ from them most extremely in point of learning, and the civilities of their lives: these Bramines being the most impure, libidinous, and sensual beasts in all the Country; privileged with the first nights lodging of every Bride, which when sated with their filthy lust, they sell, or traffick with, to strangers, serving as Stallions to old men, and as Pandars to young; so fleshed in wickedness, and ignorant of all good Letters, that they have nothing of a man but the voice and shape. Mahometanism is also entertained in a great part of the Country, first brought in by the Tartars, and neighbouring Persians, unto whom conterminous; but much increased by the victories of the Great Mongul: who being originally a Tartar, and of that Religion, hath caused it to be propagated in most parts of his large dominions.

Mountains of most note in it, besides Caucasus, and some other of the branches of Taurus, or Ararat, common to this, and the Tartarian and Persian Empires, 1 Sardonis, full of Mines of those precious stones which are called after the name of the Mountain. 2 Vindius, 3 Bittigo, 4 Adisatbras. 5 Those called Apocopi, and 6 Those named Orodii. And on the further side of Ganges. 7 Beyrrus. 8 Maandrus. 9 Those called Damusi, and 10 Semanthinus; part of this last extending also unto China. All of them very fruitful in the production of Mines, and Rivers, as will appear by looking over the particulars when we come unto them.

But the Mountain of chief note of all is that which Ptolomy calleth Bittigo, and is now named Gates; the Southern part of the great Mountain Imans spoken of before: extended from Mount Caucasus, where it crosseth the Taurus in right Angles, to Cape Comari, a known Promontory of Industan, or the higher India (which it divideth into East and West) for the space of 400 leagues and upwards. Conceived by Possellus a Learned Writer, to be that Mount Sephar, mention whereof is made in the 10th of Genesis, where it is said to be the utmost Eastern limit of the Sons of Jektan, Gen. 10. v. 30. With probability enough, for ought I can see; the Sons of Jektan being settled in these parts of India, and the Provinces of the Persian Empire which lie nearest to them. And so far Stephanus doth concur with Possellus, as to affirm of this Mount Sephar, that it is Mons India, an Indian Mountain: both of them grounding on Saint Hierom, who expressly saith, Sophora mons Orientis in India, juxta quem habitaverunt filii Jectan, i. e. that Sephar, or Sopher, is the name of a Mountain of the East in India; neer to which dwelt the Sons of Jektan. More probably, without doubt, than that we should transfer it into America, as I see some do; and make it there to be the great Mountain of the Andes, which runneth the whole length of Peru, from one end to the other and thence as some will have it to the Streights of Magellan. Which should we grant, we must not look for Jektan, or the Sons of Jektan, either in Arabia Felix, where Bichartus placeth them; nor in the Eastern parts of Asia, where most probably they may be found; but we must cross the vast Oriental Ocean, and look for them in a place where they never were; besides, that granting this for true, we must allow America to have been known in the time of Moses, which no Author that I ever met with did so much as dream of.

Rivers of most note are, 1 Indus, which ariseth out of that part of Taurus, which the Ancients called Paropamisus, the Moderns, Nangroet; and having received into it 19 other Rivers, after a course of 900 miles, falleth into the Ocean at seven Mouths, that is to say, 1 Sagappa, being the most Western, 2 Sinubum, 3 Aurum, 4 Cariphi, 5 Sappara, 6 Sabalassa, 7 Lonibare, the most Eastward. But five of these being choaked with Sands, or drawn into the neighbouring Channels, there now remains but only two. A River famous in Records and ancient Stories, for giving name unto the Country, and that so celebrated Voyage of Alexander, who sailed down it towards the Indian Ocean: the voyage holding above five moneths, of which there is said to have passed no day wherein he failed not 15 miles, India intra Gangem, or 600 Furlongs. 2 Ganges, which riseth as some say from the Mountain Imans, (or rather from that part of Taurus, where Imans falleth right upon it,) and falling headlong down the Rocks, is first collected into a Lake, or Pool (supposed by others for the fountain and original of it) whence with a gentler pace it passeth towards the Ocean; taking in by the way, as is said by Pliny, 30 navigable Rivers. In the narrowest place of eight miles breadth, in the broadest 20, seldom so shallow but that the depth thereof is 100 fathoms, or 20 Geometrical paces. Parted into five great Channels it falleth at last into the Sea: the first of which most towards the West, is called Cambysum, 2 Magnum, 3 Camberychnus, 4 Psin-dysmonus, and 5 that which leth furthest towards the East, called Amboli. This River erroneously supposed to be that Pison which watered Par. dise: and to encrease the reputation of the error, we find it countenanced by Jesphus, and other no less eminent names; and also backed by some traditions of the people which inhabit neer it. By whom it is affirmed, that one of the Bengalan Kings sent men up the River, who came at last to a pleasant place, blest with a fragrant Earth, sweet air, and quiet waters; beyond which they could go no further. The truth and reality whereof doth so possess them, that at the mouth of this River called Ganges, such as are weary of this world use to cast themselves into the current, and are presently devoured by a fish called Sea-dogs, by whom they hope to find a quick passage to Paradise. The occasion of which error among the Ancients, proceeded from those words of the Scripture, in which it is affirmed of Pison, that it compassed the land of Havilah; which granting that it did, inferreth not that either this River must be Pison, or that India is intended by that Havilah. For besides Havilah the Son of Jektan, planted in some part of India; there was another Havilah the Son of Chus, settled in the land of Havilah or Chusana, not far from Babylon: this last indeed watered by the River Pison, and the first by Ganges; too far asunder, and divided by too many Nations, to be taken for mistaken one for another. But not less famous, because none of those which neighboured the garden of Eden; perhaps of greater fame than any of those which did. For to this River do the superstitious Indians make their solemn Pilgrimages; vainly conceiving that they shall be sure of their eternity, if at the time of their death they may drink of this water. To the overflowings of this River do the people ascribe the fertility of the Countreys adjoining, as the Agyptians do to Nilus. And finally, by this River was the whole Countrey anciently, and at this present is, divided into two main parts, (each subdivided into many particular Provinces) viz. 1 India intra Gangem, 2 India extra Gangem. Of each of which we will first take a brief survey, with reference to the state and story of it in preceding times; and then consider them with reference to the present age.

I. INDIA INTRA GANGEM.

INDIA INTRA GANGEM, is bounded on the East, with the River Ganges, till it falleth thereof into the Sea; and after that with that large and spacious Bay, called anciently Sinus Gangeticus, now the Gulf of Bengala: on the West, with Paropamisus, Arachosia, Gedrosia, Provinces of the Persian Empire; and part of the Arabian Seas; on the North, where it is broadest, with Mount Taurus, branched into Paropamisus, Caucasus, and other parts: and on the South, where it endeth in a sharp point or Promontory, by Ptolomy called Commariu extrema, but now Cape Commari, with the Indian Ocean. So named from being situate on this side of Ganges; by the moderns, Indostan.

The Countrey of the same nature formerly, as it is at the present, not altered but by changing of the channels of Indus; which being shifted by an Earthquake, turned a great part of the once neighbouring Region to a sandy Desert: Indus (as many other of the Indian Rivers) fanning and enriching all the land which it overfloweth. The people of those elder times much like the Scythians, especially in their course of life; living without Cities, Temples, Houses, in their moveable Tents: their food the bark of a tree called Tala, which served for bread; and the flesh of Bucks, Does, and other Venison; with the skins whereof they made their Garments. All of them Free men, but no Slaves to be found amongst them. Less warlike than the Scythians, but as great contemners of death as they; the very women contending eagerly amongst themselves, which should accompany their Husband (one Husband having many wives) to his Funeral Pile. Of which thus Saint Hierom, He igitur contendunt de amire viri, & amplio summa certantium est ac testimonium castitatis dignum morie censeri. A Custom still retained amongst them; of which somewhat hath been said already, and more is to be said in another place.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1 Hydespes, by Ptolomy (and by him only) called Bidaspes, one of the furthest bounds of Alexander's conquests. 2 Sinasus, 3 Coa, 4 Acisnes, very memorable in the Gets of Alexander. 5 Sandabilis, 6 Zaradrus: all coming from the Northern Mountains, and all falling (Hydespes with three other Rivers first received into it) into the greater bed of Indus. 7 Diana, 8 Suralus, and 9 Soa, falling from the like Northern Mountains, into the main Channel of Ganges. 10 Naragonas, issuing from Mount Vindius. 11 Barris, from Bittigo. 12 Chaberis, from Adisatbras. 13 Tindis, from the hill called Naxentius: and 14 Tina, from the Orodian Mountains, with many others of less note. By what names called at the present, I determine not; nor finde I any which have dared to adventure on it. But doubtless to be found in 1 Catamul, 2 Cebcha, 3 Ray, 4 Chenao, 5 Relibis, all tributaries unto Indus, which is now called Schind. 6 Taphi, 7 Hirunda, 8 Chambel, 9 Jamena, which empty their waters into Ganges; the which, with such others of the principal Rivers as are now known by name to us, shall occasionally be touched on in that which followeth. Besides which Rivers, here is a famous Lake mentioned in the Gets of Alexander, Mandao.

The reason of the name I find not, nor any thing memorable of the Country; but that it was divided in the time of Ptolemy, into the Provinces of the Lambate, Caspiria, Cylindrine, and Sauftene: subdued by Alexander in his expedition into India: the famous Rivers of Acefinis, and Hydaspis (but by what names now called I find not) having here their source. So that it seemeth to have been a part of the Kingdom of Porus, or that the Kingdom of Porus was a part of this.

Places of most importance in it. 1 Lahur, or the Eastern banks of Indus, affirmed to be the fairest and most ancient City in both the Indies; of most esteem for wealth and greatness. In compass about sixteen miles, and honored for a while with the ordinary Residence of the Great Mongul, till on the burning of his Palace, spoken of before, he removed his Court to Caximir, from thence to Fatipore, and at last to Agra. Since that time made the Seat of the eldest son, or heir apparent, sent thither for avoiding all occasion of factions, which their living in the Court might breed. A City of exceeding trade, as being the chief staple for the Spices in these parts, and other commodities of India, from hence transported into the Persia by the way of Candahor, the principal Town of Arachosia; and so to Spahin, the chief City of the Persia Empire; where they are sold, by reason of so long and chargeable a journey, at excessive rates. It is said that 12000 Camels at the least, pass every year thorow it with their lading; besides what is ferried down the River, and brought up by the Portugals, who therewith traded unto Ormuz, till that Town was taken. By this we may conjecture at the wealth hereof, but more by that great mass of treasure which a late Governour hereof did leave behind him. At whose death Echabar the Mongul (for the Mongul is the heir General unto all mens wealth) found in his Coffers three millions of Gold ready coined, great quantity of Gold and Silver uncoined, and some store of Jewels; besides Horses, Elephants, Household furniture, and other goods almost invaluable. 2 Sultan pware, of more antiquity than beauty; yet of good esteem. 3 Ashce, in the common Road from Lahur to China; reported in the description of the good esteem. 4 Ashce, a Portugal Jesuite, to be a months journey from Lahur, and yet in the same travels of Benedictus a Gores, a Portugal Jesuite, to be as great as this Province with it. Which if it be true, either the Province must be large, or his journeys short: or if not true, we must remember that we had it from the pen of a Jesuite. And yet as great as this Province or Division is affirmed to be, we do not find the names of any more Towns of consideration, which may be said with confidence to belong unto it; unless perhaps we may reduce under this Division the Kingdoms of Halaican and Buchor, of which last the chief City is called Bucor succor, enriched by the neighbourhood of the Indus, but not else observable.

3 MANDAO.

THE Kingdom of MANDAO is bounded on the North, with Pengab; on the South, with the Realm of Agra; on the East, with Delly; and on the West, with the River Indus. So called from Mandao the chief City of it.

The Country more mountainous and rugged than the rest of these Provinces, by reason of the many branches of Mount Bitiggo (the Southern part of the Imau) which do over-run it: in other things partaking of the riches of India. The men, as most of those who live in such Mountainous Tracts, of a Warlike temper, comparatively with the rest of the Indians: the women here anciently as valiant as the men in other places; riding astride, and practised in the Arts of Horsemanship; for that cause called Amazons; some of which are said to be still remaining. Inasmuch as it is written in the stories hereof, that the King of this Country not long since going to the Wars, was accompanied by the Queen his Wife, marching in the Front of two thousand women, all well mounted and prepared for service.

Chief Cities hereof. 1 Mandao, seated on the banks of the River Mandava, (the Manda of Ptolemy and the Ancients) whence it had the name. A City of great note, said to be 30 miles in compass; yet so well fortified and furnished with all manner of necessaries for defence and resistance, that it held out twelve years against Mirumudin, or Merhamed the Great Mongul, who then besieged it. Surrendered at last, and with it the Kingdom. Memorable for the great battle fought before it, betwixt the said Merhamed, then coming to the relief thereof, and Badurim King of Cambala, who had then distressed it: in which Badurim lost his Tents and Treasures, and was fain to flee assigned unto Din. to crave aid of the Portugals. 2 Moltan, which being mistaken for another Town, or not the same name, on the Western side of the Indus, is by some Writers, said to have been once the chief City of a Kingdom, or a Kingdom rather of it self, but of no great note: the women were of though not so good Souldiers as their Ancestors of the female sex, yet to come as near them as they can, use boots and spurs when they take a journey, and so fitted lit astride the saddle. 3 Scernus, on the River so called, of more antiquity than greatness, as is also, 4 Polymothie, the Palibothra of Ptolemy and others of the ancient Writers; then the chief Town of the Palibothres (by Pliny and Strabo called Prafi) a People of as great authority and power as any in India.

This once a Kingdom of it self of great power and wealth, till Badurim King of Cambala having conquered the Realm of Citor, and therewith a great part of Singa, made an attempt upon this also. Galgee then King of Mandao finding himself too weak for so strong an Enemy, craved aid of Merhamed (or Mirumudin as the Latines) the Mongul Tartar; then reigning in Chalul or Arachosia, and possessed of some parts of India also, since the times of Tamerlane. Who compounding an Army of his own Subjects, some mercenary Persians, and a great body of Zagathian Tartars, from whom originally descended, came in two set battels, the first at Doceti, the next at Mandao, and following his blow possessed himself of the whole Kingdom of Cambala. But not content with that success, quarrelled the Mandao King in whose aid he came; besieged him in his principal City, which at last he won, and therewithal the Kingdom

Delly.

Kingdom also: the wretched King shewing hereby both a fair evidence and example to succeeding Ages, that the easiest way for a Prince to ruine his own estate, and endanger his neighbours, is to admit a Foreign power into his own Dominions; which he cannot as easily thrust out, as he hath brought them in.

4 DELLY.

DELLE, is bounded on the West, with Mandao; on the East, with the Kingdom of Botanter; on the North, with the Eastern parts of Pengab; on the South, with the Eastern parts also of the Kingdom of Agra. So named from DELLY, the chief City of it, by some called Della.

The Country, besides what is common to it with the rest of India, is said to be more abundantly stored than any other part of it, with Horses, Elephants, and Dromedaries. Of the people nothing singular, except it be that many of them taking more delight in thievery than honest trades, live for the most part upon spoil; but those especially whom they call by the name of Belemi, being such of the nobility or better sort, who since the conquest of their Country by the Great Mongul, have lived like Out-laws on the Mountains. Of the same temper with the Reibutes in Cambala, and the Agwans in Sanga and Dalsinda; who rather then submit themselves to a Foreign yoke, (as they count that of the Mongul) chuse to forsake their proper dwellings, and all honest ways and means of living.

Places of most importance in it. 1 Delly, a City not only honoured heretofore with the residence of the Great Monguls, who from hence pass in common appellation, by the names of the Kings of Delly, and that amongst their most knowing Subjects; but beautified with many sepulchres of their ancient Kings, whose Funerals and Coronations were herein celebrated. And though deserted of late times, by the Great Monguls, moving their Courts from place to place, as they enlarged their Empire, and increased their conquests: yet still a great many of the Nobles, and not a few Captains and Commanders, do frequent the same, and have their houses of pleasure and retirement in it. 2 Tremel, upon the Western side of the River Mandao; but not much observable. 3 Doceti, memorable for the great battle fought near unto it, in which Merhamed the Mongul overthrew the forces of Badurim, and thereby opened a fair way to the Realm of Cambala.

This Country governed a long time by its natural Princes, was at last conquered by some Moors, or Saracens, coming from Persia and Arabia, but I find not which; who grew to so great power and wealth, that Sanofaradine, a Mahometan, one of their Descendants, dreamt of no less than the conquest of all India, if not of the whole Continent of Asia also. Having about the year 1300 (memorable for the beginning of the Ottoman Empire) subdued by little and little all the neighbouring Princes which made head against him; he pierced at last into Canora, now called Decan: and conquering a great part of it, returned back to Delly. The pursuit of his victories he left unto one Abdessa his Lieutenant there, who added the rest of that Country to his Masters Territories, but kept the possession to himself: confirmed therein by Sanofaradine, with the title of Regent. But Sanofaradine dying in a War against the Persians, left for his Successor a son so unlike his Father, that the conquered Provinces revolted from him unto other Masters, more able to govern and protect them. Confined unto its former bounds, it remained notwithstanding of sufficient power to preserve it self, from any of their equal neighbours, till the rising of the Great Mongul: whose puissance being unable to withstand, it submitted at last to Adabar, the son of Merhamed, the second Emperour of this line: who to assure himself of the peoples loyalty, and conquests, settled his Court a while at Delly, the chief City of it; from whence removed on the next prosperous emergency, as before was noted.

5 AGRA.

THE Realm of AGRA is bounded on the North, with Delly, and Mandao; on the South with Sanga and Cambala; on the West, with Indus, which parteth it from the Province of Sinda, a part of the Kingdom of Cambala; on the East, with Oristan, or Orissa. So called from Agra the chief City of it, and the Seat Royal of late times of the Great Monguls.

The Country said to be the best and most pleasant of India, plentiful in all things, and such a delicate even piece of ground, as the like is hardly to be seen. Well watered, as with other Rivers, so most especially with those of Tamlico and Jemena; which last runneth thorow the midst of it, North and South, or rather from the North-west to the South-east, from whence bending more directly Eastwards, it falleth at last into the Ganger, or that which is supposed to be Ganger, for the head of that great River is not certainly known. The people for the most part Gentiles, Mahometanism coming in with the Great Mongul; and generally inclining somewhat to the Pythagorean. For such as live upon the banks of the River Jemena neither eat flesh, nor kill any thing. The waters of which River they esteem so sacred, that thereof they usually make their temple, and say their prayers therein, but naked (in which posture they both dress their meat and eat it) lodging upon the ground, being imposed by them as a penance, and so conceived.

Places of most esteem herein. 1 Fatipore, or Fettibarri, on the West side of the River, a very fair and goodly City; once beautified with a Royal Palace here built by Echabar (after the removal of his Court from Caximir) with many spacious gardens belonging to it; but much decayed, since the fixing of the Court at Agra, to which most of the stones are carried, and no small quantity of Corn sowed within the Walls. 2 Agra, on the North bank of the River Jemena, inferior to Lahur for wealth and greatness, but far more populous: the constant residence of the Court here in these later times; drawing to it was taken hence, to succeed unto it. Of the same nature, as it seemeth, with the hill Amara in Ethiopia, or the Abassine Empire.

The Country formerly inhabited by a people called Venazarari, by Religion Gentiles, and held by them till the year 1300, when overcome by Sa Nofaradine, a Mahometan, and King of Dilly: who driving the Inhabitants into the Hill-Countries, possessed himself of a great part of it, compelling them to submit unto his Religion. The residue hereof subdued by Abdessa, whom Sa Nofaradine left here to pursue the War, was by him governed with great justice for 20 years; when dying he left his Government to his son Mamudza, confirmed by the Successor of Sa Nofaradine in his Fathers Regency, on the payment of an annual Tribute. Mamudza soon finding that the young King was of no great Spirit, not only refused to pay the Tribute imposed upon him, but took unto himself the title of King of Decan, giving this name unto the Country (before called Canara) in regard that he had filled it with a Mungrel body of Christians, Mahometans, and Gentiles, acknowledging no common Parent, nor agreeing in Language, Customs, or Religion; the word Decan signifying in that tongue, as much as an illegitimate brood, or a body of Bastards. Out of these he made choice of twelve (others say eighteen) whom he appointed Governours of so many Provinces: not daring to trust any of the old Nobility, or of the Natives of the Country; and hoping that these Slaves so promoted by him, would be more subject to command. But here his silly hopes deceived him. For these Slaves either governed by their Masters example, who had done the like unto the son and heir of Sa Nofaradine; or presuming on their own strength, and some foreign aids, left to their Master nothing but an empty title; each one becoming absolute in his several Province. Nor did his successors for any long time enjoy that title; Daquem the last of them being taken at Bider his chief City: and thereupon the name of King usurped by every one of those petit Tyrants. Reduced at last into fewer hands, such of them as were left, became considerable Princes, as appeareth by the great Army raised by Idalcen for the siege of Goa. But in the end, distressed on the one side by the Portugals, who embarrased their trade, and invaded on the other side by the great Mongul with most puissant Armies; Melle entitled King of Decan, and Miram King of Brampore, were in fine subdued by Echebar about the year 1600. Against whom and his Successors, though the Venazarari still hold out, as the Resbutos or Rasbooches do in the Realm of Cambaja; and that the King of Amdanagar, and perhaps some other petit Princes, are not yet brought under: yet we may look on the Mongul as the Lord of this Country; the residue of these Royaleties, and petit Princes, (if any of them be remaining) being Hangers or Vassals to him. Against whose further Progress to the Cape of Comari, which Echebar so greedily aimed at, the puissant Kings of Narsinga, and those of Malabar have opposed their power; whose Kingdoms and Estates we must next survey, before we take a view of those other Provinces which are now under the command of that mighty Monarch.

9 CANARA.

CANARA is bounded on the North, with Decan (whereof anciently it was a part;) on the South, with Malabar; on the East, with Narsinga, from which separated by the Mountain Gates; on the West, with the Ocean. The reason of the name I find not, nor much worth the searching.

The Country hath a fair Sea-coast, with many capacious Harbors to it, which cannot but add much to the wealth thereof; as liberally furnished in the in-land parts with Rice, Figs, and Sugars; but destitute of Wheat, Pulse, and Barley. Not much the poorer for that want, the people either not knowing or not regarding the use of bread; but living on such fruits as the earth produceth of it self, without the charge or care of the husbandman. In other things but little differing, if at all, from the rest of the Indians: their Religion for the most part Paganish, but intermixt with Mahometans.

Principal Towns and Cities of it, 1 Melinde, a commodious Haven. 2 Onor, a Port Town of good note, sometimes held by the Portugals. 3 Baticalia, situate in the richest part of all this Country; never possessed by the Portugals, but under contribution to them. 4 Mangalor, a Town of great wealth and trade; fortified with a strong Castle, once destroyed by the Portugueses, but recovered and repaired by the King of Narsinga, who is Lord of this Country. 5 Muyendre, more within the land. And so is also, 6 Lispor, famous for her Quarries of Adamant. 7 Solfette, in a Peninsula of 20 miles compass, containing 36 Villages, and 80000 Inhabitants; the Town about 9 miles from Goa, and subject with the whole Peninsula, to the Portugals.

This Country is now subject to the Kings of Narsinga, but formerly under the command of its own Princes: the name of Canara, comprehending in those times all that Country also, which is now called Decan. Conquered by Sa Nofaradine and Abdessa, and by Mamudza cantoned into many Presettures, this part reverting to its old name, fell to the Narsingan, who taking his advantages, in the Minority of one of their Princes, became Master of it. And when the Idalcen, (for I take that not so much for the name of a man, as a Title of dignity) quarrelled his possession of it, as appertaining properly to the Kingdom of Decan; Chrimmarao then King of Narsinga, brought a powerful Advocate to defend his right; that is to say, an Army of 606000 Foot, 29650 Horse, and 537 Elephants; every Elephant having a Tower on his back with four men in it: With which strong Argument the Idalcen being confuted in the Schools of War, with much difficulty saved himself, though he lost his cause: the Narsingan ever since continuing quiet in the possession of this Country; except only some of the Sea Towns in the power of the Portugals; who in the year 1567 destroyed in those few places by them possessed, no fewer then 200 of their Idol Temples, with many of their Pagodas, or Idols in them; converting the Rents and Lands to which belonged unto them, with the Revenues raised from the several Ports which they hold herein, to the maintenance of a Colledge of Jesuites in Solfette, and other Religious houses founded by them, in their other Cities.

Malabar.

10 MALABAR.

MALABAR is bounded on the North with Canara, from which parted by the River Gangerago; on the East, with the great Mountain Gates, by which divided from the Realm of Narsinga South-east; on the West and South, with the main Indian Ocean. On the Coast, whereof it doth extend for the space of 300 miles; that is to say, from the River Gangerago, to the Cape Comori: which I conceive to be the Commaria Extrema of Pyolome, though others take it for the Promontory by him called Cory. But the breadth hereof is nothing answerable to the length, not above 50 miles where broadest, and ending towards the Cape in a point or Conus.

The Country more populous, for the bigness, then any in India, enjoying a very temperate Air, and a fruitful soil; well watered, and indented with many Creeks: unfit for Corn, but plentiful in Rice, and all manner of Spices, as Ginger, Cinamon, Cassia, Pepper, and most excellent fruits. Amongst their Trees, there is one whose name my Author speaks not, which bears Dates like unto the Palm; out of which they have not only Wood for fuel, but they draw from it Wine, Sugar, Oyl, fine Cloth, and Cordage; another Tree, which beareth Cotton, and Cypress, or Cobweb-lawn, of the leaves whereof they make a fine stuff like to Satin or Taffete. They have also great store of Apes, and Monkeys, Parrots, Parakeets, and other Creatures not known in these parts but from thence: not to say any thing of their Lions, Elephants, Bears, Bugles, common to them with others of their Indian Neighbours. The flowers there always in their Verdure, and the Trees perpetually green, by reason that the Air is so sweet and temperate.

The people are of coal-black colour (differing therein from the rest of the Indians), swarth and complexioned like the Olive well limbed, and wearing their hair long and curled; about their heads an handkerchief wrought with gold and silver; and about their middle a cloth, which hangeth down to conceal their nakedness. Of manners treacherous and bloody, more properly to be termed desperate than stout and valiant; and for more fury in their Wars, they use poisoned Arrows, as they do also in their thieving both by Sea and Land, to which more addicted. In Religion for the most part Gentiles, and more besotted generally on their Idolatries, than the rest of these Nations. The Pagode, or Idol which they worship, seated upon a brazen throne, and crowned with a rich Diadem; from his head issue out four horns, from his mouth four tusks; his eyes fiery like a Glow-worm, his nose flat and ugly, his visage terrible, his hands like claws, his legs and thighs like those of a Lyon. In a word, we cannot paint the Devil in a more ugly figure than they do their God. Unto this Pagode or his Priest, they offer the virginity of all their daughters: the Pagode having in the place of his privie parts, a Bodkin of gold or silver; upon which the Bride (married most commonly at ten or twelve years of age) is forcibly set; the sharpness of it being such, that it forceth out the blood in great abundance: and if the prove with child that year, it is said to be of his begetting, and more esteemed. Others with more humanity, in stead of torturing their daughters on this wretched Idol (parallel almost to the offering of their sons to Moloch amongst the Syrians) present them to the Bramini, or Idol-Priest, to be deflowered the first night of the wedding: and without one of these two handsets no man is suffered to enjoy the use of his wife, nor their Kings themselves. More privileged yet than many women neighbouring on them, in that they are not compelled to burn themselves with their husbands bodies; but may have many husbands either successively or at once, as they list themselves: and if at once, she sends her children to that husband (as we know who did) who she thinks to have the best right to them.

The Country very well watered, as we said before, and parted by large Rivers into many Provinces; as if intended naturally to be cantoned into many Kingdoms. Divided at present, and long since, into those of 1 Cononor, 2 Calicut, 3 Granganor, 4 Cochin, 5 Cai-Colam, 6 Conlan, and 7 Travancor.

1 CONONOR joyneth to Canara, extending Southward on the shore about 20 miles; where it bordereth on the Kingdom of Calicut. The chief Cities of which, 1 Cononor, giving name to the whole Kingdom, well built and beautified with a very fair Haven, no more safe than spacious, capacious of the greatest vessels, and for that cause much frequented by foreign Merchants; but especially by the Portugals, who for the assuring of their trade have here a Citadel, erected and well garrisoned with the Kings consent. 2 Cota, not far from Cangeracco, the border betwixt this and Canara, 3 Peripatan, on the confines of Calicut. 4 Murabia, 5 Trampatan, 6 Main, intermediate Towns; but not much observable.

2 CALICUTE, South from Cononor, extending on the Sea-shore 25 Leagues, and situate in the most pleasant and fruitful part of all Malabar. Chief Towns whereof, 1 Pandarane, on the skirts of Cononor. 2 Tunor, a retiring place of the Kings. 3 Partangale. 4 Chatua, on the borders of Granganor. 5 Chale, a strong piece, once in the hands of the Portugueses, but in the year 1601 recovered by the King of Calicut, who had besieged it with an Army of 90000 men. 6 Capacote, the Haven of Calicut. 7 Calicut, the chief City of the Kingdom, to which it gives name, in length upon the Sea three miles, and a mile in breadth; containing about 6000 houses, but standing some of them far asunder; mean and low built, few of them exceeding the height of a man on horse-back; the soil being so hollow and full of water, that it is not capable of the foundation of an heavier building; for that cause unwall'd. Inasmuch that Merchants houses are here valued but at 20 Crowns, those of the common sort at no more than ten. Which notwithstanding, of great trading, and much frequented by Arabians, Persians, Syrians, Indians, yea the very Tartars; these last from the furthest parts of Cathay (taking Cathay in that general sense, as it comprehendeth all the Countries of the Tartars, between the Malabar.

the Mount of Imam, and the Eastern Ocean) being 6000 miles distant from it, inasmuch that it is said by some of the Spanish Writers, that when Vasques di Gama, the first discoverer of the way to the East Countries by the Cape of good Hope, first arrived in this Haven, he found in it no fewer than 1500 Merchants Ships of all sorts, but without Anchors and the compass, few of them fit for a Sea-fight, nor able to sail (in regard they had not the use of the compass) but by shore-winds only. The common staple in those times of all Indian Merchandise, till distracted into several Ports by the power of the Portuguese, who being more industrious, and better Architects, have forced a foundation on the Shore for a very strong Cattle; by which they do command the Haven, and receive Custom of all Merchandise going in and out. The inconvenience whereof being found by the King of Calicut, he besieged it with 100000 men: and though the Portuguese held it out a whole winter together, yet in the end they were fain to quit it; but first demolished it to the ground, that it might not be made usefull to those of Calicut. A City of exceeding wealth, and of no less wantonness; the men here using to change wives with one another, to confirm their Amities: and the women spending their whole time in adorning themselves with Rings and Jewels about their ears, necks, legs, arms, and upon their breasts, though going naked for the most part, one would think that a little dressing might suffice them. If covered, it is only with a Smock of Calicut, a kind of linnen cloth here made, and from hence so called: and that not used but by those of the better sort.

CRANGANOR lieth on the South of Calicut, a small Kingdom, and affording little worth the speaking of; but that a great part of the Inhabitants of it are of those old Christians, whom they call Christians of St. Thomas. Cranganor, the chief City, which gives name to the whole, affirmed to be full of them, that they amount unto the number of 70000; vexed and exposed, to publick scorn both by the Idolaters and Mahometans, amongst whom they live. The City rich, commodiously built for trade, at the mouth of a River, which watering with his crooked streams the most part of the Country, makes it far and flourishing.

COCHIN, more South than Cranganor, extended on the shore for the space of 40 leagues: and therein many Christians of the first Plantation, besides some Converts made of later times by the Jesuits. Towns of most note herein, 1. Angamale, the Archbishops See of those ancient Christians; fifteen miles from Cochin. 2. Cochin, a Bishops See, but of later erection; and the chief City of this Kingdom, which takes name from hence. Situate on the mouth or out-let of the River Maugat, by which almost encompassed like a Dumy Island. Of great trade in regard of its Haven, very safe and spacious; as also by the friendship of the Portuguese Nation. By whose power and favour they have not only freed themselves from the King of Calicut, to whom before they did acknowledge some subjection; but drawn from thence a great part of the traffick also: this King permitting them to erect a Cattle on the Haven, to secure their trade, which the other on good reasons of State forced them to destroy. The King hereof in some respect superior unto him of Calicut, when a Vassal to him: this King being the Pope, or chief Bishop, as it were, of all the Bramines; for which cause revered by all the Kings of Malabar, (as the Pope by many Princes of these Western parts) who look upon him as the head of their superstition, and pay him many annual duties.

CAI-COLAM is on the South of Cochin, with which agreeing both in the temper of the Air, and fertility of the Earth: which notwithstanding, the King hereof is not so rich as his neighbors. Here live also many of the old Christians, taking name from Saint Thomas: but those so destitute of Priests and Ministers to instruct them in the Principles of Christianity, that once in three years there came some formerly from the Patriarch of Muzall in Affrya to baptize their children. Better I hope provided for in these later dayes, since their embosoming and reconciliation to the Church of Rome. Their chief Town of the same name with the Country, hath a very fair Haven, in the fashion of a Semi-Circle; well traded till destroyed by the Portuguese, but since that re-edified. Of less note there are many both Towns and Villages, but such as do deserve here no particular mention.

COLLAN, upon the South of Cai-Colam, extended 20 leagues more Southwards upon the Shores; is said to be destitute of Corn, but plentiful of Pepper, and most sort of Spices. So stored with Horses, and fit Riders to serve upon them, that the King hereof keeps 20000 Horses in continual readiness either for invasion or defence. This Kingdom, as the rest before, takes name from the chief City of it, which is called Conlan, 24 miles from Cochin, and once a Member of that Kingdom; of great resort by foreign Merchants, by reason of the fair and commodious Haven. In former times the ordinary seat of the Cobritin, or chief Priest of the Bramines, till moved to Cochin; and held to be the Metropolis or Mother City of all Malabar; the rest being thought to be but Colonies of this. Both in the City and the Country there are many Christians, as well of the original foundation of Christianity, as of the late improvements which are made by the Jesuits.

TRAVANCOR, called also TRANCANOR, reacheth from the Kingdom of Conlan, to the Cape of Comari, and turning towards the East, bendeth again unto the North, as far as Cael in the Kingdom of Bisnagar or Narsinga. By which accompt it hath the benefit of the Sea on all sides except towards the North: reaching in breadth from the West Seas unto the East about 90 miles. The Country as the rest before, inhabited by many with the name of Christians, if they may be called so which want Sacraments: the condition of these Thomean Christians in former times being so unhappy, that in 50 years before the coming of the Jesuits, (if the Jesuits may be believed from whom we have it) they had seen no Priest, nor other Minister of the Gospel. Chief Towns hereof, (for of those many others of less note I shall make no mention) are 1. Travancor, the chief City, which gives name to the Province, but neither well built, nor of very much trading. 2. Quilacare, the head City of a peculiar

Signeury,

Narsinga.

Signeury, but held of the Kings of Travancor, as their next and immediate Lords, though all those Kings also Fundatories of the Crown of Narsinga. And were that the worst Fennre by which they hold, it might be tolerable; but there is a matter of worse consequence which attendeth these beforesaid Princes. The Kingdom here is but a pomp of 12 years continuance, and then endeth in a sad Catastrophe. For at the end of those twelve years, the King repairs to Quilacare, prayeth before the Idol above mentioned, then mounteth on a Scaffold covered with Silk or Tapestry, and in the sight of all his People gathered together to behold this strange solemnity, curteth off his nose, ears, lips and other parts, which he casts towards the Idol, and in conclusion cuts his own Throat for his final Sacrifice: his designed Successor being present at this bloody Sacrifice, who at the twelve years end is to do the like. Never was Scepter bought at so dear a rate: For though all Crowns be lined with thorns, yet here the pomps of Sovereignty be less lasting than in other places; the entrance full of fears, and the end, of horrors.

These Kingdoms heretofore but one, till the year 900, or thereabouts, were branched and cantoned into these seven, by Sarama Perimal, the sole Monarch. He by the solicitation of some Arabians, trading to his Ports, became Mahometan; and therein so devout, that he resolved upon a Pilgrimage to Meccha, there to end his dayes. At his departure he divided his Estates into these seven parts, distributing them amongst the nearest of his Kindred; assigning unto him of Conlan, the prehemine in sacred matters, and the Imperial dignity unto him of Calicut, with the title of Samorin, that is to say, Chief Emperor, or as some write, a God on Earth. He only privileged with the right and power of Coinage; the rest to be subordinate, if not subject to him. From Perimals setting forwards to the City of Meccha, the Malabars accompt their reckonings and begin their years; as the Christians from the birth of their Lord and Saviour. And for a time his Helts were punctually observed. But the Kingdom of Calicut being weakened by the power of the Portuguese, the other Kings began to free themselves from that subjection, and in the end to cast off all relation to him, and to his Prerogatives. Yet still he is esteemed of more Power and Majesty, than any of the rest of the Kings of Malabar; and looked on with more reverence than any of them. The certainty of his Revenues I have no where met with, but conjecture them to be very great; first in regard of that infinite trading which is managed from most parts of the World in his Port of Calicut; the Customs and Imposts upon which must needs be of exceeding value; and secondly in reference to the wealth of private Merchants, many of which are said to equal some Kings in Africk, and Dukes in Europe not a few.

Quid Domini facient? audent cum talia Fures;

And if the man such riches have,
Then what must he that keeps the Knave?

What Forces he is able to raise may be fully seen by that which hath been said before; wherein we find him with an Army of 90000 men besieging and taking in the fort of Chalem, with another of 100000 beleaguering the Cattle which the Portuguese had built near his City of Calesud. And when the said Portuguese stirred up the King of Cochin to make head against him, he fell upon them suddenly, both by Sea and Land, with 60000 Land-Souldiers, and 200 good Vessels of war for the Service at Sea. Sufficient force to reduce the rest of these petty Kings to their old acknowledgements; but that some of them to avoid the danger, have put themselves under the Vassallage, or protection at the least, of the Great Mongul; others by suffering the Portuguese to build forts in their Kingdoms, have engaged them in defence of their Estate against this pretender. His forces consist most of Foot, Horse being unserviceable in these Countries, by reason of those many Rivers which interlace it; and these Foot are compounded most of Gentry which they there call Nairon, trained to their weapons when they are but seven years of Age; every one to that weapon which he most delighteth in; which makes them very expert and nimble at them: much privileged for that cause by the Lawes of the Countrey; and so esteemed of by the King, that out of them his Sisters choose what men they please to their Husbands; some of them by that means being made the Fathers of the King succeeding.

Nothing else memorable touching the affairs of Calicut, but the way of succession to the Kingdom: the Crown descending upon none of the Kings Children, but on the Son of his eldest Sister, or nearest kinswoman. For being that one of the Bramines hath always the maiden-head of his Queens; and that some of these Stallions are continually allowed to keep them company; it is presumed, or very probably supposed, that the Queens Children are the Bramines and not the Kings.

8. NARSINGA

NARSINGA is bounded on the South, with Travancor; on the West, with the Mountain Gates; on the North, with Orissan or Orixá; on the East, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Narsinga, the chief City of it, and the Royal residence of the King.

The Country is said to be in length 600 miles, or as some say, of as much extent as can be travelled in six months; plentiful in the same commodities which the rest of India doth afford, except Pepper and some other Spices which are proper to Malabar. Not so well furnished with Rivers as some other places; which want is liberally supplied by water falling from the Mountains and received into trenches, meers, and Lakes, which do wonderfully cool, moisten and enrich the Land, causing the Corn and Cattel to prosper above all imagination. Most destitute in this kind is the Province of Choromandel, in which if any year passe without rain, they fall into such extremities, that they are fain to sell their children.

The People in Religion Gentiles; so worshipping one God, as the Lord of all, which is taught them by the light of nature; that they joyntly the Devil or their Pagodes in communion with him, whereto induced by the perfusion of their beauly Bramines, who thereout suck no small advantage. Some Christians there are intermixt, of the old Plantation, especially in Maliapur, and the Region of Choromandel: but not so well instructed in the Principles of their own belief, as to be able to convince or convert the Gentiles, nor to dissuade them from the use of some Heathenish customs, though barbarous, inhumane, and against all reason: not used in any place, but amongst the Indians. Amongst which I reckon for most savage, the forcing of poor women to burn themselves with their husbands bodies, the womens kindred not the husbands thrusting them on these hard conditions, who reckon it a disgrace to their Family, if she should refuse. And because they will be sure not to have that infamy stick upon them, they have ordered that the woman who shall so refuse, must shave her head, and break her Jewels, and not be suffered to eat, drink or sleep, or company with any body till her death. A life more miserable than the Flames which they seek to shun. This makes them leap into the fire with joy and greediness, and to contend which shall be formost: she being thought to have been most loving during his life, which is now most willing to accompany him in his death, and offer her self to his Manes, at the Funeral Pile: whereunto thus alludeth the Poet:

Et certamen habent, letibi, qua viva sequatur.

Conjugium; pudor est non licuisse mori.

Ardens vitrices, & prebent pectora flamme;

Imponuntque suis ora perusta viris.

A flame 'tis not to dye: they therefore strive,

Who may be fam'd to follow him alive.

The Victor burns, yields to the flame her breast;

And her burnt face doth on her husband rest.

Chief Cities of this Countrey, 1 Cael, on the borders of Travancer, belonging anciently to the Kings of Conlan, now to those of Narsinga; the people whereabouts called Paravi, are a kind of Christians, who live for the most part by fishing for Pearl, which they sell to the Portugals, and Bengalan Merchants. 2 Goleunda, the chief City of the Province called Muslipatan, the Lord whereof is a Moor, of the Sophian Sect; but a Vassal to the Kings of Narsinga. 3 Chandagrin, one of the Seat-Royals of the King. 4 Prepest, three miles from Chandagrin, memorable for a yearly Feast here celebrated in honour of Pereimal (once sole King of Malavar) reckoned for a Saint at least in these parts of India: the offerings at which accustomedly amount unto 200000 Crowns. 5 Chadambaram, the Mother City of those Pagan Solemnities, which are done to Pereimal, who hath here a Temple endowed with 30000 Ducats of Annual Rent, all consumed by the Bramines belonging to it, who pretend to have been born out of Pereimal's head. 6 Madura, honoured with the residence of the Chochanada, or the Chief Prelate of the Bramines of this Kingdom; so numerous, that in this Town, and the Territories of it only, are thought to be no fewer than an hundred thousand. The seat also of one of three Naiab, or Tributary Kings of the Crown of Narsinga; the other two residing at 7 Gingi, and 8 Tanagar, the chief Towns of their Principalities, but not else observable. 9 Maliapur, called also St. Thomas, from an opinion that the body of the Apostle was here interred: martyred here by the Idolaters Indians, whose Posterity in other things like unto other men, are said to have one leg and foot as big as an Elephant: a punishment inflicted on the whole Generation for sin of their Ancestors: How true this is, I cannot say, but sure I am that Dorotheus saith, that he resteth at Calamina, where he was slain with a dart. However the Portugals to make some use of the old Tradition removed some bones from this place, which were said to be his, and enshrined them in Goa, their own City: much visited by profitable Pilgrims, to their great enriching. The City once so large and populous, that it contained 330 Temples, for the use of divers Nations which resorted thither. In these later dayes desolate and forlorn, inhabited onely by some old Christians, till the Portuguese began again to people it with new Colonies. 10 Choromandel giving name to a large Sea-Coast, lying on the West-side of the Gulf of Bengala. 11 Cassa, a Town of Choromandel, in which the woman is not burned with her Husband, as in other places of this Countrey, but buried quick in the same grave with him. 12 Negapatan, in the same Region, inhabited for the most part by Saint Thomas Christians. 13 Tarnassari, once the head City of a Kingdom so called, the King whereof was able to bring into the field 100000 horse and foot, and 100 armed Elephants, but now subject to the King of Narsinga. The people black, but so out of love with their own colour, that they willingly prostitute their wives or daughters, to any people of a whiter and more clear complexion. 14 Bisnagar, once the chief City of this Kingdom, whence the King is sometimes called the King of Bisnagar. In those times 24 miles in compass, with nine Gates in it, (amongst others) continually guarded with Souldiers; and a magnificent Palace, not elsewhere equalled. In the year 1565, sacked by four of the Mahometan Kings of Decan, who with their joint Forces had invaded this Kingdom, it became desolate and forsaken; and the Court removed to 15 Peneagada, eight dayes journey within the Land (Bisnagar being seated on the borders of Decan) but long it had not staid there when removed to 16 Narsinga, where it hath ever since been fixed, which is now the chief City of this Kingdom, unto which it gives name; though the King many times calls himself by the name of that City where he resideth for the present.

Of the Antiquity of this Kingdom I have little to say, these Eastern parts not being known at all till these later times, nor well known in these. About the year 1550, their King then reigning was imprisoned by three of his Captains or Commanders; who shewed him only once a year to his Subjects, paring the power and government amongst themselves. He being dead, and his Son kept in the like restraint, Rumargio the first Captain ascended the Throne, Timaragio managed the Estate, and Bengabe commanded the Army. But these Usurpers being overthrowen by the Kings of Decan, in the year 1565, Timaragio the Survivor Orissan.

Survivor took the charge of all; whose sonne, to make himself sure of the Kingdom, murdered his imprisoned Sovereign (the life and liberty of Kings being much of a date) whence followed many broils and troubles touching the succession, till settled in the person of Chrimarao, the undoubted Heir; who did not only restore peace and quiet to Narsinga it self, but recovered Canara out of the hands of the Idolcan, who had before endangered his citare therein. Of the great Army which he led against this Idolcan, we have spoke already: adding here only, that before he went upon this enterprize (called the journey of Rachiol) he sacrificed in nine days 2036 Beasts to the Country Idols, the flesh whereof he capped to be distributed amongst the poor. Roused at first, and being persuaded by some about him to go out of the field, he is said to have made this Noble Answer, that he had rather the Idolcan should boast that he had slain him, than vanquished him. And thereupon leaping into the thick of his enemies, and well followed by the valiantest of his Friends, he obtained the victory. But this vast Army of 600000 foot, 30000 Horse, 537 Elephants, with necessities answerable to such infinite multitudes, speaks only what he can do on extreme necessity, or when he hath some long time of preparation, as he had in that Action. The power of Kings is better measured by their standing forces, than by necessitated Levies. And herein this Prince comes not much short of his greatest neighbours: his standing bands consisting of 40000 Nairos, or Gentlemen of his own Kingdom, which serve on foot; 20000 Horses, who are either Persians or Arabians, and 200 Elephants; well paid, and kept in continual readines; his foot defraided out of his Revenues, his Horse maintained like the Turks Tamariots; out of certain Lands distributed amongst his Captains (some of which are said to have a million of Crowns per Annum) to furnish him with these stable bands of Horses and Elephants.

As for his Revenue, it is reckoned at 12 millions yearly, out of which he is thought to lay up three; defraying with the rest the expence of his household, and the entertainment of his Foot. This sum amassed together out of the Lands, mines, and forfeits of the Countrey, which are wholly his; and the waters of some Rivers (sold by him to his Subjects) which he monopolizeth; the common people having nothing but their Arms and Labour. Of which, the mines, forfeits, and one third of the lands, he retaineth to himself; the other two being divided amongst his Captains. So that it is no marvel if to such a Countrey yield him such an income, considering it is all his own. I do rather wonder (of the two) it should yield no more.

9. ORISTAN.

ORISTAN or ORIXA, is bounded on the South, with Narsinga; on the West, with Deli and Sanga; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Botanter; on the East with the Gulf of Bengala, and part of Patanaw or Patane: so called from Orissa, the chief City of it.

The Countrey hath plenty of Rice, cloth of Cotton, and a fine stuff like silk, made of grasse, and there called Terva; with which together with Long Pepper, Ginger, Myrabolins, and other commodities here growing, they use to load 25 or 30 Ships from the Haven of Orissa only. The people so well governed, or so hating theft, that in the time of their own Kings, before they came under the Monguls, a man might have travelled with Gold in his hand without any danger. In other points, of the same temper and religion with the rest of the Indians subject to that Prince.

It is generally well watered, and interlaced with many Rivers, which do much moisten and refresh it; but none so beneficial to the Kings hereof as the River Guanen (of old called Chaberis) the waters whereof esteemed sacred by the Kings of Calicute and Narsinga, and much used by them in their sacrifices and superstitious purgations, are wholly ingrossed by this King, who selleth them to those Princes at excessive rates. Besides which Rivers it is watered with a fair Sea-coast, of 350 miles in length; that is to say, from Cape Guadarino in the South, which divides it from the Realm of Narsinga, to Cape Laogora in the East, which parts it from Bengala: But for all that not very much traded, because not so well provided of commodious Havens, as many other Indian Provinces of a far less Territory.

Towns of most note herein, 1 Orissa, on the Sea-side, or nor far from it, the best traded Port of all this Kingdom; to which the name thereof is to be ascribed, as the Head City of the Countrey. 2 Catech, six dayes journey within the land, the ordinary residence of their Kings, before it was subdued by the Great Monguls. 3 Angeli, a well-frequented Port, at the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; from whence many Ships are yearly laden with Indian Wares. 4 Bacoli or Bacola, more within the land, and once the head City of a Kingdom, but a very poor one. 5 Simergan, where they held it an impiety to eat flesh, or kill any beast. 6 Senepate, of which little memorable. Nor do I find any thing which deserves much memory in the affairs of this Kingdom; but that the Kings hereof were Gentiles, subdued not many years since by the K. of Patanaw: and both grown weaker by that war, by Ech, the Great Mongul.

10. BOTANTER.

BOTANTER (under which name I comprehend all those Petit Kingdoms which are crowded together in the North and North-East of this part of India) hath on the South, Orissan and Patanaw; on the West, the River Guenga or Chaberis, by which parted from the Realms of Pengad; on the North, the Zagathian Tartars; divided from it by some branches of Mount Taurus; on the East the famous River Ganges. So called from Botia, the principal City of Botanter, which is the chief of these small Kingdoms.

The Countrey great, of three months journey in extent, full of high Mountains; one of which may be seen five dayes journey off; in which are said to dwell a people with ears of a span long or more, whom otherwise those of the Valleys count as Apes. In those parts which are next Pengal, they are white, and Gentiles; in others, more inclined to the Olive colour. Their garments they wear close to their bodies, so strait that one cannot see a pleit or wrinkle; and those they never put off by night nor day whilst they are able to ha: go on: nor do they wash at any time, for fear of defiling so pure a Creature as the water. Content with one wife (devised to be held a miracle in these Eastern parts) and yet cobab not with her after two or three Children. When any of them die, the South-ayer is to tell them what to do with his body; according to whose direction (first consulting his Books) they burn, bury, or eat it. Few Towns of note there are amongst them. The principal, 1 Battia, the Metropolis of it. 2 Chamur of which little memorable. 3 Kakares, the second Kingdom of this rank, large, but exceeding mountainous, as being over-run by the branches of Mount Caucasus, which divides it from Tartary. So named of Kakares the chief Town thereof, by some called Negariot, their Staples for the sale of their cloth, (most of the people being Weavers) bought of them by the Chinays, and Tartarian Merchants, who resort frequently to those Markets. This is a distinct Kingdom of it self, the Kings whereof are called Dermains, but Vassals to the great Mongul. And so is he of 3 COUCHE, another Kingdom of this Tract, fronting upon Cauchin-China, beyond Ganges; so called from Couche, the chief Town of it. The Country rich, by reason that it may be drowned, and dried up again, when the people will: full of good pastures by that means, and those well stored with Sheep, Goats, Swine, Deer, and other Cattel; though the people neither kill nor eat them, but on the contrary build Hospitals for them, in which when lame and old, they are kept while they die. Yet many times they eat their money, and I cannot blame them; their small money being Almonds.

4. GOUREN the most Northern Realm in this General division, so called of Gor, or Goren the chief Town of it. The Country in some parts mountainous, out of which springeth the River Sicilly, one of the Tributaries unto Ganges; the rest a kind of Desert or unpeopled Country, joyntly close to Couche. In which are few Villages, grass (or reeds rather) longer than a man, and therein many Buffis, Tigeis, and other wild Beasts; none wilder than the Theeves, who frequent the wildernesses.

In this Tract also are the Kingdoms of 5 RAMME, and 6 REGON, joining upon Zagathay, or enclining towards it; possessed by the Mongul Tartars from the time of Tamerlane, if not before: but Fenditaries to the Kings of Chabul or Arachossia, who commanded in the North East of Persia, and these North parts of India; and from those places drew his Army or the greatest part of it, when called unto the aid of Galsee, the King of Mandac. Here is also the Kingdom of 7 TIPPUVA, naturally fenced with hills and mountains; and by that means hitherto defended against the Mongul Tartars, their bad neighbours; with whom they have continual warres. But of these Northern Kingdoms lying towards Tartary, there is but little to be said, and that little of no certain knowledge; those parts being hitherto so untravell'd, that they may pass in the Account of a Terra Incognita.

11. PATANAW.

PATANE or PATANAW, is bounded on the North, with the Realms of Butanter; on the East, with Ganges; on the West, with Orissan; and on the South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Patanaw the chief City of it. There is another Kingdom of this name in the further India; but whether it were so called because a Colony of this; or from some resemblances in the nature of the several Countries, or from the signification of the word in the Indian language, I am not able to determine. Certain I am, that though they have the same name, yet they are under several Governments, and situate in far distant places: no otherwise agreeing than in some resemblances, as Holland in the Low-Countries doth with Holland in Lincolshire.

The Country yieldeth veins of Gold, which they dig out of the pits, and wash away the earth from it in great Bolls. The people tall, and of slender making, many of them old: great Praters, and as great dissemblers. The women so bedecked with silver and copper, especially about the feet, that they are not able to endure a shoe. Both Sexes use much washing in the open Rivers, and that too intermix together in their natural nakedness; especially such as live near the banks of the River Jemena (esteemed more holy than the rest) which from Agra passing thorow this Country falleth into Ganges.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Patane, a large town and a long one, built with very broad streets; but the houses very mean and poor, made at the best of earth and hurdles, and thatched over head. The Metropolis of this Kingdom, because the ancientest, and that which gives the name unto it. 2. Bannaras, a great Town on Ganges, to which the Gentiles from remote Countries use to come in Pilgrimages, to bathe themselves in the holy waters of that River. The Country betwixt this and Patanaw, very fair and flourishing, and beautified upon the Rode with handsom Villages. 3. Siripur, the chief Seat of one of the old Princes of this Country; not yet subdued by the great Monguls. 4. Ciandican, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala; the Seat of another of their Kings. One of which memorable for a trick put upon the Jesuits when blamed by them for the worship of so many Pagodes, as contrary both to the law of God and nature: For causing them to rehearse the Dicatalogue, he told them that he did offend no more against those commandements in worshipping so many Pagodes, than they themselves in worshipping so many Saints. 5. Satagam, a fair City (for a City of Moors) once part of Patanaw, since ascribed to Bengala.

The people of this Country properly called Patanawans, but corruptly Paribians, were once of great command and power in these parts of India. Lords for a time, of a great part of the Kingdom of Bengala.

Bengala.

la, into which driven by Babur, the Mongul Tartar, the Father of Emanpaxda, and Grand-father of Echebar. Their last King being slain in that war, twelve of their chief Princes joined in an Aristocracy, and warring upon Emanpaxda had the better of him. After this, their successors attempted Orissan, and added that also to their Estate, but they could not long make good their fortunes; subdued by Echebar the Mongul, and made subject to him. Three of them, viz. the Prince of Siripur, the King of Ciandican, and he whom they call Mansadalin, retain, as yet (for ought I can learn unto the contrary) as well their ancient Paganism, as their natural liberty. The other nine, together with Mahometanism, have vassal'd themselves to the great Mongul, now the Lord Paramount of the Country.

12. BENGALA.

BENGALA is bounded on the North, with Patanaw; on the East, with the Kingdoms of Pegu; on the South and West, with the Gulf of Bengala. So called from Bengala the chief City of it. It containeth in length on the Gulf and River 360 miles, and as much in breadth into the Land: A Country stored with all things necessary to the life of man, great plenty of Wheat, Rice, Sugar, Ginger, and long Pepper. Such abundance of Silk, and Cotton, and of Flesh and Fish, that it is impossible that any Country should exceed it in those commodities. And which crowns all, blest with so temperate and sweet an air that it draws thither people of all sorts to inhabit it. Here is also, amongst other rarities, a Tree called Moses, which beareth so delicate a fruit, that the Jews and Mahometans who live here, affirm it to be the fruit which made Adam to sin.

The natural Inhabitants for the most part, are of white complexion, like the Europeans, subtil of wit, and of a curious disposition; well skilled in dealing in the world, much given to traffick, and intelligent in the way of Merchandize, if not somewhat deceitful. Not ignorant of other Arts, but with some smattering in Philosophy, Physick, and Astrology. Stately and delicate both in their Diet and Apparel: not naked as in others of their Indian Provinces, but clothed in a shirt or smock reaching to their feet, with some upper Garment over that. The women of an ill name for their unchastity, though Adultery be punished with cutting off of their noses. Near, if not curious and too costly in this one custom, that they never seeth meat twice in the same Pot, but for every boiling buy a new one. In Religion, for the most part Mahometans, especially on the Sea-shores, which lay most open and commodious to the Arabians; by whom Mahometanism was here planted many ages since.

Of Rivers we need take no care having spoken of Ganges; That with its many channels may abundantly serve to water so small a Province. But hereof more anon in a place more proper. Proceed we now unto the Cities. The principal whereof, 1. Bengala, which gave name to the whole Kingdom, situate on a branch of the River Ganges, and reckoned one of the most beautiful Towns of all the Indies. Exceedingly enriched by trade, but more by Pilgrimages, by reason of the holiness and divine operations ascribed by the Indians to the waters of it; there being few years in which not visited by three or four hundred thousand Pilgrims. 2. Gouros, the seat-Royal of the ancient Kings. 3. Catigan, on the bottom of the Gulf of Bengala, a well-traded Port. 4. Taxda, once a Town of great traffick, and situate in those times on the banks of Ganges; now by the changing of the Channel (occasioned by the frequent over-flowing of it) above a league off from the River. 5. Porto Grande, and 6. Porto Pequeno, two Towns of the Portugals; but without Forces for defence, or rules for Governments. Places like the Aylum, which was built by Romulus; whereunto such as dare not stay in their own Countries, or any well regulated Cities, use to make their resort; privileged here to live in all kind of licentiousness.

Here is also in the North parts of this Province, or adjoining to it, the City and Kingdom of ARACHAN; lying along the banks of Ganges, but so remote from the Sea, that it is 50 miles distant from the nearest branch of it. Wealthy and populous withall; governed heretofore by a King of its own, so wallowing in wealth and sensual pleasures, that he had in this City and the parts adjoining twelve Royal Palaces or Seraglios, all stowed with women for his lust. Now subject with Bengala and Patanaw, betwixt which it lyeth, to the Empire of the Great Monguls.

There are some small Islands in the Gulf of Bengala, which I account unto that Kingdom. 1. Baracata, now called Basse. 2. Barasse, of which name there are five in Protolmy, three of them by Alexator said to be Mindanao, Cailon, and Sabur. 3. Two, called the Islands of Good Fortune, by him placed under the Aequator, and said to be inhabited by Anthropophagi, or man-eaters; as also were three more which he calls 4. Saadidhe, now named Cainam. 5. Insula Satyrarum, or the Isles of Satyres, three in number, the people whereof were reported to have tails like Satyres. And 6. those called Maniolas, in number ten, (now Islas de Pracel) reported by Protolmy to be so stored with Adamant stones, that they violently drew to them any ships or vessels which had iron in them; for which cause they which used these Seas fastned the planks of their ships with wooden pins. But our later Navigators find no such matter, unless perhaps it may be in the exploits of Sir Huon of Bourdeaux; where indeed we meet with such an Island, in the course of his Errandrie.

But to return again to the Kingdom of Bengala, we find it of a different constitution from the rest of the Kingdoms of these parts. Not governed by a Family of successive Princes, descended from the Stem of a Royal Ancestry, as the others are. Chance, or necessity, had brought thither many Ambassadors, or *Ethiopian*s, who made a conquest of the Country; and chose a King out of themselves. To keep what they had gotten, and perpetuate the Regal honour to the Ambassine Nation, they procured thence yearly certain thousands of Slaves; whom they trained up unto the wars, advanced unto the highest commands in civil and military service; and out of them elected one for their Lord and Sovereign: as the Mamlucks in the Kingdom of Egypt, whom herein they followed. By some Arabians trading with them, they

Mandas. they came in time to admit Mahometanism amongst them; on the Sea-coasts especially. Dispossessed first of some part of their Kingdom, lying about Satagan, by the Patenians, when driven to seek new dwellings by Baburxa, the Mongul Tartars; and of their whole Kingdom, by the valour and good fortune of Echebar, who added it unto the rest of his estate.

Thus have we drawn together all the Indian Provinces on this side of Ganges (the Kingdoms of Malabar and Narsinga being but a Parenthesis in the construction of this sentence) into the hands of the Mongul. So called for his descent from the Mongul Tartars, one of five great Tribes or Nations into which that people were divided. Derived originally from the famous and mighty Tamerlane, who having added almost all the greater and lesser Asia, unto his estates, left Persia, with the parts of India which lay nearest to it on the North, to Myrza Charrok, his fourth sonne. But his issue failing in Abdala, the 4th. of that line, those estates fell to Abusaid, descended from Maromcha, the third sonne of Tamerlane: Whose sonne and successor called Zenzes, by some Malaomeres, being dispossessed of the greatest part of the Kingdom of Persia, by Ussan-Cassanes: the rights of all, with the possession of Arachosia (now called Cabul) and Paropamisus (now Candahor or Sablestan) together with so much of India as was held by those Princes, remained in Hamed, one of the younger sons of Abusaid: whose posterity laying hold on such opportunities as were offered to them, have made themselves Masters in few years of this mighty Empire. Whose Successors and their achievements we shall here present.

The Great Mongul.

- 1473 1 Hamed, the son of Abusaid, of the race of Tamerlane, after the Conquest of Persia by Ussan-Cassanes, succeeded in Chabul, Candahor, and the parts of the Realm of India subject to the Tartars.
- 1500 2 Babor, or Baburxa, in danger to be dispossessed of most of his Estates by the neighbouring Uzbekes, living upon the borders of Persia, Tartary, and India, whom at last he quieted; enlarging his dominions by the Conquest of some part of Patanaw, and other Kingdoms in the North.
- 1532 3 Hamoyen, the sonne of Babor, or Baburxa, commonly called Emanpaxda, vanquished by the Parthians, or Patanians, and their confederates, craved aid of Tamas, the 2d. Persian Monarch of this line, on promise to conform to the Sophian Sect: and by that aid confirmed and settled his affairs, but held himself to the former Principles of his Religion.
- 4 Merhamed or Miramudius, sonne of Emanpaxda, called in by Galgae the King of Mandas, against Badurim the Cambaian, vanquished the Cambaian King in two pitched fields, and conquered the Kingdoms of Mandas, and Balassia, with some other Provinces.
- 5 Adabar, the sonne of Merhamed, added the Realms of Delly and Cambaia, unto his Dominions.
- 1550 6 Mahomet Selabdin, commonly called Echebar, brother of Adabar, the most fortunate and victorious Prince of all this family, subdued the Kingdoms of Caximir, Agra, Deccan, Orissa, Bengala, Patanaw, and divers other of less note.
- 1605 7 Selim, surnamed Jangheere, the son of Echebar, who added nothing that I hear of, to his fathers conquests.
- 1627 8 Blockie, the grandchild of Selim by his eldest sonne, (wickedly murdered by the practice of Curroon at Agra) proclaimed King on the death of his Grand-father; but shortly after made away by Asaph Chawn, to make room for
- 1627 9 Curroon, the third son of Selim or Jangheere, and son-in-law unto Asaph Chawn; having by his own Ministers, and the hands of his father-in-law, murdered the proclaimed King his Nephew, and all the other Princes of the Royal blood, succeeded into the Estates, and was crowned at Agra. A wicked and bloody Prince, still living for ought I hear to the contrary.

To look a little on these Princes, their estate and power; in matters of Religion they have generally been Mahometans, that Religion being long since embraced by the Tartars, from whom they originally descended. But not so scrupulous or precise in that profession, as to endeavour the suppressing of any other opinions: both Echebar, and his son Jangheere, being so inclined unto Christianity, that they permitted the Jesuites to build Colleges and Churches in Agra itself, the Imperial City, and many other chief Cities in his dominions. Of Echebar it is reported, that being doubtful what Religion to adhere unto, he caused 30 Infants to be so brought up, that neither their Nurses nor any body else should speak unto them, resolving to addict himself to the Religion of that Country, whose language should be spoken by them, as most agreeable to nature: and he did accordingly. For as those Children spoke no language, so was he positive and resolved in no Religion; Able to see the vanities of Mahomet, and the horrible impieties of the Gentiles, but not willing to conform unto the strictness of Christianity. And though Selim who succeeded, to content his Mahometan Subjects, declared himself for that Religion; yet his affairs being once settled, and his Throne confirmed, he became as Neutral as his Father; Sultan Curroon now Reigning, of the same Neutrality, and tis well he is so; there being no Religion so impure and bloody, which he would not dishonour by his known ungraciousness.

The

The Language spoken by these Princes, and their natural Subjects the Magores, or Mongul-Tartars, India, &c. is said by some to be the Turkish. But I think rather that it is some Language near it, than the very same: And that the Language which they speak is the ancient Scythian or Tartarian, from which the Turks (a Scythian people) differ but in Dialect, a sprinkling of the Persian intermixt amongst them. A mixture not to be denied, in regard of their long dwelling in that Country, the intercourse which their Subjects of those parts have with these of India, and that the greatest part of their Soldiers, Officers and commanders, are supplied from thence.

Their Government is absolute, if not Tyrannical, the Great Mongul being Lord of all, and heir to every mans estate which is worth the having: the persons and purses of his Subjects at his sole disposing; so that he may amass what treasures, and raise what forces for the Wars his need requireth; or the Avarice or Ambition of his Ministers shall suggest unto him. First, for his Treasures, it is conceived that his Revenue doth amount yearly to fifty Millions of Crowns, and there are reasons to persuade that it may be more. The Country very rich, and notably well traded from all parts of the world, the Impost upon which is of infinite value; besides the vast sums of money brought into his Dominions from all Countries whatsoever, which hold traffick here; their commodities not being to be parted with but for ready coin. The whole land being also his, he estates it out for no term certain, retaining a third part of the profits to himself; and leaving two thirds to the Occupants, to be held by them during pleasure. Who if they thrive upon their bargains, they thrive not for themselves, but him it being in his power, if he want patience to expect the Incumbents death, to enter on the whole estate of the Tenant by the way of Eschear: but if he tarry till the death of the Occupant, it falls to him of course, the wife and children of the deceased being fairly dealt with, if he content himself with the personal estate, and leave the Land to them to begin anew. For instance, of those huge sums which in so rich a Country may be had this way, it is said that when the Vice-Roy of Labor dyed, he left to Echebar three millions of Gold, besides Silver, Jewels, Horses, Elephants, Furniture and Goods, almost invaluable: And of one Raga Gagnar, another of his great Officers, that at his death the Great Mongul seized of his into his hands 3400 pound weight of Gold, besides Plate and Jewels. Besides these means of heaping treasure, all the Mines of the Country are wholly his, and the Prebends given by all sorts of Suters, hardly to be numbered; none being admitted to his presence which comes empty-handed. Finally, if Badurim, which was King of Cambaia only, could bring into the field at once 500 Tun of Gold and silver to pay his Army; and after the loss of all that treasure, advanced upon the sudden the sum of 600000 Crowns, which he sent to Solyman the Magnificent to come to succor him; both which it is well known he did: What infinite Treasures must we think this Prince to be master of, who hath more than four times the estate of the King of Cambaia, and far more trading now than in former times!

By the like Parallel we may conjecture somewhat at his Forces also, Badurim the Cambaian brought into the field against Merhamed, and the King of Mandas, as was partly touched upon before, 150000 Horses, 500000 Foot, 2000 Elephants armed, 2000 pieces of brass Ordnance, of which were 4 Basilisks, each of them drawn with 100 yoke of Oxen: and 500 Carts loaded with powder and shot. What then may we conceive of this Prince, who is Lord of so much a greater estate than he; but that his Levies may be raised proportionably to so great Dominions? But because possibly Badurim did extend himself to the utmost of his power, and having lost two Battels was never able to recruit again, which no wise Prince would do but in great extremities: It is conceived that the Mongul, without running any such hazards on the loss of a Battel, can in an instant raise 50000 Elephants, 300000 horse, and Foot proportionable, and yet have stock enough for an Aster-game, if that he should chance to lose the first. But it is seldom that he hath advanced to so high a Muster. For in his action upon the Kingdoms of Deccan, he had but an Hundred thousand men, and a thousand Elephants for fight; though possibly of all sorts of people there might be more than double that number. For in his ordinary removes in time of Progress, it is said that his followers of all sorts amount unto two hundred thousand, & that his tents do usually take up as much ground as the City of London. Yet notwithstanding this great power, the fortunes of this Empire have not only been at a stand, since the death of Echebar; but the Raibooches in Cambaia, the Venazarari in Deccan, and other puissant Rebels in other parts of his Dominions, hold out still against him; some of them being said to command as much land as a pretty good Kingdom, and to have always in readiness 20000 horse and 50000 foot, to make good their Mountains. Nature or Divine Providence have given to Empires, as to men, a determinate growth, beyond which which there is no exceeding.

2 INDIA EXTRAGANGEM.

INDIA EXTRAGANGEM is that part of the great Continent of India, which lieth on the further side of the River Ganges, from the spring or fountain of it, wheresoever it be, to the Fall thereof into the sea by the fifth and last mouth thereof, which is called Antiboli: The other four being reckoned into the other part of India, on this side of that River. From hence extended Eastward as far as China and the Oriental Ocean, on other parts bounded as before.

The Country in those elder times, to renowned for wealth, that one Tract of it had the name of The Silver Region, and an other of The Golden Chersonese: this last supposed to be the Opbir of Solomon, of which more hereafter. The people of the same nature and disposition, in the elder times, as those which did inhabit on the hither side of the Ganges; not so well known to the Greeks or Romans as the others were, by reason of the remoteness of their situation; nor so well discovered at the present. So that the best accompt we shall be able to give of it (though that lame enough) will not be so exact and punctual as of that before; with reference either to the State hereof in the times of the Antients, or the affairs of it in these days.

Mountains of most note in it, 1 Bepyrus, 2 Maandrus, 3 Semanthinus; and 4 those called Damasi, touched upon before, in our general discourse of India. Out of which, and from other Springs, flow these following Rivers, 1 Catabeda, 2 Borsanna, 3 Sadua, 4 Temala, 5 Bosynga, 6 Chrysaoras, 7 Polandus, 8 Attabus, these three last in the part hereof called the Golden Chersonese, 9 Daonias, and 10 Dorias, rising out of the Mountains called Damasi. Others there are whose names I meet with in my Author, but of no great note: by what names any of them now distinguished, it is hard to say. Nor find I any who have dared to adventure on it.

Of the chief Towns, 1 Balanga, 2 Cirtatha, 3 Tafale, 4 Tugma, and 5 Malihura, have the name of being the Metropoles of their several Nations. 6 Triglyphus, only honoured with the name of Regia: more memorable perhaps for the white Crows, and bearded Hens, which are said to have been thereabouts, than for being the Seat-Royal of some petty Prince. After these 1 Sada on the banks of the River Sadus, 2 Samba, 3 Salara, 4 Colis, 5 Zabe, and 6 Sinda, have the name of Cities, 7 Baracura, 8 Berabinnu, 9 Belynga, 10 Tacola, 11 Sabana and 12 Thiboubastus: are marked out for the most noted Empories, or Towns of Trade; the memory of Sabana being still preserved in the Frith of Sabaun, betwixt this Chersonese and Sumatra. Others there are not noted by those special Adjuncts, of which, 1 Cocconagora, and 2 Balonca, in the Golden Chersonese; 3 Rband-marcoia, in the Midlands, 4 Pentapolis, near the mouth of Ganges, called Antibolus; 5 Aganagara, near the Bay called Sinus Magnus; and 6 Corygaza, one of the principal Towns of the Maranda, may be some of the chief.

The old Inhabitants hereof, besides the Maranda last spoken of, were the Gangarides, and Gan-geni, inhabiting on the banks of Ganges; the Tacorai, bordering on the Mountain Bepyrus; as the Tilada on Maandrus; and the Animache, and Caboca, near the hills called Damasi. The Balada, said to be crooked, short and thick; but of a cheerful aspect, and clear complexion: of which composition also the inhabitants of the Golden Chersonese were observed to be: the Barra, and Cudus, on the Bay called Sinus magnus; the Liskori, a theevish and Piratical people, who lived in Caves, and were affirmed to be of so hard a skin, that it was not penetrable by an Arrow. These, with the rest, too many to be here recited, the issue in most likelihood of Charviah and Saba the sons of Jockan; of whom we find so many footsteeps in Sabara Civitate, Sabaracu, Siam, Sabana Emporio, Subanus Fluvio; and in the Countries now called Ava, and the Kingdom of Cavellan. Of any of their actions we find little in ancient stories, or of the power of any of their former Kings but that it was given out in the time of Alexander, that he and the Ganges lived a Prince called Agramenes (the most powerful King of all those Countries) able to bring into the field 200000 Foot, 20000 Horse, 3000 Elephants, and 2000 armed Chariots. With which report though Alexander was the more inflamed to trye Malleries with him; yet his Souldiers were so terrified with it (remembering the hard bout which they had with Pernu) that no persuasions could prevail with them to go further Eastward. Nor hear we much of them after this, unless the conversion of the Indians in the time of Constantine, may be applied to those on that side of the River, as perhaps it may.

As for the later observations and discoveries of it, we find it (as most barbarous Countries else still reduced to order) dismembered and subdivided into many estates; almost as many Realms as Cities, and distinct governments amongst them, as Tribes and Nations. Most of them Gentiles in Religion, with whom the name of Christ and Christianity not so much as heard of, till the coming of the Jesuits thither; who have not only obtained leave, but some invitations, for the promoting of the Gospel. And for Mahometanism, though it had got some footing on the Sea coasts of the Gulf of Bengala, lying most convenient for the trade of the Arabian Merchants; yet on the North, and midland parts, and those towards China, and the Oriental Seas, it was as little heard of as Christianity. But for the Kingdoms of this part, I mean the chief of them, to which as many of the rest as are worth the looking after are to be reduced, they are those of, 1 Brama, or Barma, 2 Cauchin-China, 3 Camboia, 4 Jangoma, 5 Siam, and 6 Pegu.

1 BRAMA.

THE Kingdoms of BRAMA or BARMA have on the West, the River Ganges; on the North, part of Cathay in Tartary; on the East Cauchin-China; and on the South, the Kingdom of Pegu. So called from the Brachmanes, Bramanes, or Brames, possessed for many ages past of these North-West Counties. By the transposing of a Letter, they are now called the Kingdoms of Barma.

The Country of these Brames or Bramanes, extendeth Northwards from the nearest of the Peguan Kingdoms, for the space of 150 Leagues, but far more from West to East: watered with many great remarkable Rivers, issuing from the Lake Chiamay, which though 600 miles from Sea, and emptying it self continually into many Channels, contains four hundred miles in compass, and is nevertheless full of waters for the one or the other.

By the overflowing of which Rivers, and the commodiousness of the Lake, the Country is wonderfully enriched, as Egypt by the overflows of Nilus. Which notwithstanding, there are in it many huge forests, in the West especially; and therein many Lyons, Tygers, Ounces, Serpents, and other Creatures of a mischievous and hurtful Nature.

The whole Country containeth the Kingdom of 1 Calam, 2 Prom, 3 Melinta, 4 Miranda, 5 Bacan, 6 Tangu, 7 Ava, and 8 Brama.

Of

Cauchin

OF 1 MELINTAY and 2 MIRANDA, I find little written, but that they were conquered with the rest, by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, in the first rising of his fortunes; becoming the foundation of his following greatness. Of 3 BACAM, it is said that it is plentifully enriched with Mines, both of Gold and Silver. In 4 CAVILAN, commonly and contractedly called CALAM, we find apparent foot-steps of the name of Cavilah the son of Jockan. Of the rest more is to be said, not much.

5 PRUCM, though it be a little Kingdom, is exceeding populous, and stored with a warlike People. Given by the second King of Pegu of the Tanguum Race, to a younger sonne, who being by his Father commanded to the Siege of Mormolan which had then revolted, not only did decline the service, but rebelled against him, and by the strength of this small Kingdom held it out three years. But seeing his Father's fortunes in a manner desperate, he repented of his disobedience, and went unto his aid, with an Army of 50000 men of his Natural Subjects. Treacherously poisoned on the way by his chiefest Counsellor, for fear the Crime of his Revolt would be charged on him.

6. TANGU, is the name of one of these Bramian Kingdoms, so called from the chief Town thereof: formerly subject with the rest of the Kings of Pegu, and governed by their several Vice-Royes. One of which taking his advantage of the wars between the Kings of Pegu and Siam, began to set up for himself, and husbanded his affairs so well, that he became sole Lord of these Bramian Kingdoms; as afterwards of all the rest in this part of India. Not long enjoyed by his Successor, when dispossessed and slain by one whom he married to his Sister, and made Governour of this very Province. In which he bore himself so stiffly, that being sent for by his King to aid him against some of his Rebels, and to bring all the Inhabitants of the Country with him: he answered that he would send one half; to send all, unreasonable. Incensed with which denial, the King armed against him; but he put the Leaders to the sword, and seized their followers. After this being now in Arms, and despairing of reconciliation, he took upon himself the title of King of Tangu; and to secure himself therein, joined with the King of Arrachan against his Sovereign; whom he most barbarously slew (after he had put himself into his hands) with his wife and children. Neither enjoyed he long the fruits of his villany, subdued not long after, with the rest of these Indian Princes, by the King of Barma; of which more hereafter.

7. AVA, another of these Kingdoms, and one of the plantations of Cavilah also; is liberally furnished with all things necessary for the life of man. It affordeth also store of Rubies; which they dig out of the Mountains; a certain creature which breeds Musk, together with great plenty of horse and Elephants. Their chief City is called Ava, which name it giveth to the River upon which it is built, issuing out of the Lake of Chiamay, and communicates the same to the whole Province. Subject for many ages past to the King of Pegu, till conquered by the Vice-Roy of Tangu, as before is said; and by him given, with the Title of King, unto one of his brothers. Who rebelling against the sonne and successor of his Benefactor, and by him slain in single Combat; this Kingdom was conferred on a sonne of the Conqueror. A Prince of more virtue than his Brother, and one which grew at last unto so great power, that in the bustle or combustions of the Kingdom of Pegu, he surprised or forced the Fort of Sieriangh, formerly given unto the Portugals by the King of Arrachan; slew all the Souldiers, and spirited Philip de Brites, who commanded it. After which, gathering together the dispersed Peguanes, and repairing part of the City for them, he was likely to have made himself a good bargain by it; if the sudden coming of the King of Barma, had not spoiled his markets.

8. BRAMA or BARMA, the most Southern of these Bramian kingdoms, the King whereof was Feudatary to the Kings of Pegu, or of their appointment. Of no account when the Portugals came first acquainted with India, nor in many years after; now of most renown. For sitting still when all the rest of their neighbours were embroiled in wars, they gathered so much power and strength that in the end, one of the later Kings hereof observing how the forces of his neighbouring Princes were consumed, and their treasures wasted, levied an Army of 300000 fighting men; 40000 Elephants; with all things suitable. And with this power subdued the kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan; conquered the Cities of Pegu and Odia, (the two chief Cities of these parts) invaded the Kingdom of Siam, and possessed himself of it; making in little time all the lesser Princes to become his Tributaries as they still continue.

2. CAUCHIN-CHINA.

CAUCHIN-CHINA is bounded on the West, with the Kingdoms of Brama; on the East, with part of the Great Realm of China; on the North extending towards Tartary; on the South bordering on Camboia.

The Country aboundeth with Gold, Silver, Aloes, and great store of silks, of which the Inhabitants make Tassata, and other stufes. It affordeth also plenty of Porcellane Earth, which being made into Cups, Dishes, and other Utensils of household, is sold by the name of China-ware: well counterfeited of late amongst us, by putting a white crust on our Potters earth; as near for use and shew as the natural China.

The people very stout and warlike, especially for Foot-service, though they have many horses here, and those fit for war. Well-practised on their Petees also, on which they spend great store of powder, but not so much in war, as in sports and triumphs; yet making much more than they spend, the earth in some parts yielding very fit materials for that commodity. Trained up to Manufactures, especially to the making king of Powder, Silks, and Procellanes, which they sell to the Chinese. Idolaters for the most part, as are those of China, whose Characters and language they also use: but so that there appear some inclinations unto Christianity, in many of them, who have erected many Crosses, and do admit the pictures of the Blessed Virgin, and the final judgment. Men not unlikely to have made a further Progress in the Gospel, if they had met with better Teachers than these Laymen Books.

The chief City hereof is called Chanchin-China by the name of the Province, situate on a River coming out of China; and passing hence into the bottom of a large and capacious Bay. The whole Country divided into three Provinces, and as many Kings, over which one Paramount; but he and they the Tributaries of the King of China. Belonging hereunto is a little Island called Ainao, ten miles from the land, where the Inhabitants have a great trade of fishing for Pearls. The only Province of the Indies, which is wholly subject to the power of a foreign Prince; the Portugals holding in this Continent many Towns and Cities, but no whole Provinces.

3. CAMBOIA.

CAMBOIA is bounded on the North, with Cauchin-China; on the East and South, with the Ocean; on the West, with parts of the Kingdom of Siam, and the Realm of Jangoma. So called from Cambola the chief City of it. Divided commonly into the Kingdom of Champa, and Cambola specially so called.

1 CHAMPA, the Northern part hereof bordereth on Cauchin-China, and is liberally provided of all necessaries: besides which, there is plenty of Gold, and of the wood called Lignum Aloes, prized at the weight thereof in silver, much used in Bathes, and at the funerals of great persons. This a distinct Kingdom of it self, but subject with the rest to the King of Burma. The chief City of it, called by the name of Champa, which it communicates to the Country, is situate neer the Sea-side, and of very good traffick.

2 CAMBOIA specially so called, lieth South of Champa, a very great and populous Country, well stored with Elephants and Rhinoceroses, which last the Indians call Abades. It yieldeth also great plenty of a sweet-wood, which they call Calamba, as precious and as much esteemed of as the wood of Aloes, (if not the same, or some Species of it as I think it is) together with abundance of Rice, Flesh, and Fish; Well-watered with the River Mecon, which issuing out of China, and having received many lesser streams fallerh first into a great Lake of 300 miles compass, and thence into the Indian Ocean; making betwixt the Lake and that an hundred Islands. By the overflowings of this River the whole Country is enriched (as Egypt by the like overflowing of Nilus): the inhabitants at those times betaking themselves to their upper Rooms, and passing altogether by boats from one place to another.

The people are conceived to be strong and warlike, though more inclined to merchandise and navigation than to deeds of Arms. Idolaters of the worst kind, esteeming Men and Beasts of a like condition in regard of any future judgment: of late beginning to set up, and adore the Cross, which is (it seems) the first Principle of Religion in which the Friers are wont to instruct their Converts. Not weaned as yet by these new Teachers, from burning the women with their Husbands, common to them with many other Indian people, nor from burning their Nobles with the King, used only here; but voluntarily to express their loves, not upon constraint.

The chief Towns of it, 1 Cambola, one of the three prime Cities of this part of India; the other two being Odia and Pegu, of which more anon. Situate on the River Mecon before it was destroyed; where it hath its fall into the Sea; well traded, as the Staple for all this Country, the commodities whereof are brought hither, and here sold to the Merchant. 2 Chudurmuch, twelve leagues from Cambola, on the same River also. 3 Coul, on the Sea-side in the very South-west Angle of all the Country. The Kings whereof, once absolute, and at their own disposing, till invaded by a vast Army of the neighbouring Laos: in which their King being slain, and his forces weakened, his sonne and Successor was constrained to become a Vassal to the crown of Siam. But fearing the loss of his estate, when that Kingdom was made subject to the Kings of Pegu, in the year 1598, he applied himself unto the Portugals, offered them a Peninsula (part of his dominions) extending three leagues into the Sea; and sent to the Jesuits for some of their Society to live and preach amongst his people. Not able for all these honest Policies to preserve himself from being made a Fendatary of the King of Burma.

JANGOMA, or the Country of the LAOS, is bounded on the East, with Cambola and Champa, from which parted by the River Mecon; on the West, with the River of Pegu, by which divided from that Kingdom; on the South, with the Realm of Siam; on the North, with Burma.

It took its name from Jangoma the chief Province of it; the other two (for there be three of them in all) being those of Lavae, and Carrey. All of them joyned together called the Country of Laos, by the name of the people, a mighty Nation and stout, by Religion Gentiles, naked from the middle upwards, and trussing up their hair like a cap. Their Country very rich and level, but very ill neighboured by the Gueoni (Paulus Venetus giveth them the name Gangigu) who possess the mountains: whence falling in great companies to hunt for men whom they kill and eat, they commit cruel butcheries amongst them. Inasmuch as this people, not able to defend themselves against their fury, or rather wanting good Leaders to conduct and order them (for it is said that they can make a million of men) were fain to put themselves under the protection of the King of Siam, whom they obeyed no further than the humour took them.

Gueoni

Towns they have none of any note, except those three which give name to the several Provinces; and those of no note neither but for doing that. The people for the most part live on the banks of their rivers, where they have Cottages of Timber; or else upon the Rivers in boats and shallops, as the Tartarians said the Defarts in their Carts or Wheel-houses. One of their Rivers (commonly called River of Laos) said to extend 400 leagues within the land, as far as Tartary, and China; and from July to September to invert its course, and flow back strongly toward its fountain. Not governed by any certain rule or order, till they submitted to the Patronage of the King of Siam; and then no other than they listed; though for their sakes, that King engaged himself in a war against the Cannibals, their most deadly enemies, accompanied with 25000 foot, 20000 Horse, and 10000 Elephants. Secured by his protection from the teeth of those Cannibals (of whom otherwise they had been devoured) in the year 1578, they defended the River in great multitudes, to the number of 200000, and fell into the Realm of Cambola. But they made an unprosperous adventure of it. For though the King of Cambola lost his life in the battell, yet he gave them such a fatal blow, that they were almost all slain, drowned or captivated in the fight. Weakened wherewith they became an easie prey to the Vice-Roy of Tangu, when he first made himself sole Master of this part of India. Who giving to his brother the Kingdom of Ava, and leaving to his eldest Son the Kingdom of Pegu, with the Sovereignty over all the rest, conferred this Country, with the title of King of Jangoma, on a younger Son. But he, begotten on a daughter of the King of Pegu, and born after his Father had attained this whole Indian Empire, was easily perswaded by the Talapies, (so they call their Priests) that his Title was better than that of his Elder Brother, who was born before it. Prevented in his claim by the Kings of Arrachan and Tangu, by whom that King was slain, and his Kingdom wasted. How he sped afterwards I find not. But probable it is, that he submitted with the rest to the King of Burma.

5. SIAM.

SIAM, is bounded on the North, with Jangoma, and part of Pegu; on all other parts, with the wide Ocean, save that it toucheth on the East, with a part of Cambola; and on the West, with a point of Pegu. So called from Siam the chief of all those Kingdoms which pass under this name, as that from Siam the chief City of it.

The Country of greater length than breadth, stretcheth it self Southwards into the Sea many hundred miles, in form of a Peninsula or Demy-Island, called anciently Aurea Chersonesus, or the Golden Chersonese: one of the five famous Chersoneses or Peninsulas of the elder Writers; the other four being Peloponnesus in Greece, the Thracian Chersonese neer Propontis, the Taurican Chersonese in the Exzine, and the Cimbrian Chersonese in the North of Germany, now part of Denmark. It had the name of Aurea, or the Golden, superadded to it, from its plenty of gold, for which much celebrated by the Ancients, both Greeks and Romans (and therefore not improbably thought by some to be Solomons Ophir) still famous with the rest of the Countreys of the Kingdom of Siam, for abundance of Gold, Silver, Tinn, and other metals; great quantity of Pepper sent yearly thence, with store of Elephants, and Horses: the whole Countrey very fat and fertile, well stored with Rice, Corn, Grafs, and all other necessaries.

The people generally much addicted to pleasures, if not to Luxury; delighted much with Musick and rich apparel; and such as stand much upon their honour. For their instruction in good letters they have publick Schools, where their own Laws, and the mysteries of their own Religion, are taught them in their natural Language; all other Sciences in strange tongues understood by none but by the learned. To til-lage they can frame themselves, and are painfull in it; but by no means will follow any Mechanical Arts, which they put over to their Slaves. In Religion for the most part Gentiles, worshipping the four Elements amongst other Gods; to each of which as they are severally affected, so are their bodies to be disposed of: either burnt, buried, hanged, or drowned, after their decease; as in their lives they were most devoted to the Fire, Earth, Air, or Water. Some Christians here also in and about the parts possessed by the Portugals; but more Mahometans: who possessing two hundred Leagues of the Sea-coasts of this Country, have planted that Religion in most part of the Country now by them possessed.

It containeth in it many Kingdoms, some of little note; those of most observation, 1 Malaca, 2 Patane, 3 Jor, 4 Muantay, and 5 Siam, properly and especially so called. Of which Malaca is now in the hands of the Portugals, for and Patane are possessed by the Arabians or Saracens, the other two have followed the fortunes of the Kings of Siam.

1. The Kingdom of MALACA taketh up the South part of the golden Chersonese, extended towards the North from the Cape or Promontory which Protonny calleth Malanconia, in the extreme South-point hereof neer unto Sabana, then a noted Empory, for the space of 270 miles. So called from Malaca the chief City of it, of old times called Musicana, or built very near it, from whence this Tract is called by Sirabo, Muscani Terra. The City seated on the banks of the River Gaza, which is here said to be 15 miles in breadth; by the frequent overflowings whereof, and the nearness of it to the Line

Anrea.

Line (being but two degrees in the North) the Air hereof, and all the Territory belonging to it, is very unwholesome; and for that cause the Country but meanly populous. In compass it is said to be 20 miles, of great wealth, because of almost infinite trading; for Spices, Engments, Gold, Silver, Pearls, and precious Stones, the most noted Empory of the East. Infomuch that it is said by Ludovico Barthelemi, who was there before the Portugals knew it, that it was traded by more ships than any one City in the world, more by far since the coming of the Portugals to it, than it was before. The people (as in all this tract) of an Ash-colour, with long hair hanging over their faces, bloody and murderous, especially when they meet one another in the Night. Few other Towns of any note, in a place so unhealthy, except a Sinapura, situate East of Malaca, near the Promontory of old called Magnum; supposed by some to be the Zabe of Ptolomy; and that more probably than that it should be his Palura, as Maginnu would have it; Palura being a City of the Higher India, and different at the least 20 degrees of Longitude from any part of this Chersonese. But whatsoever it was called in the former times, it was in these later ages the mother of Malaca; the greatest part of the Trade and people being removed from thence to this newer foundation: before which time it was the best frequented Empory in these parts of the East. 3 Palo Zambilan, 120 miles on the West of Malaca, from whence to Sinapura, coasting about the Southern Cape (now called Cape Liampo) we have a Sea shore of 270 miles, as before was said. No other habitation of any reckoning, but a few Sheds upon the shore for the use of Fisher-men, and some scattered Villages in the land: the People dwelling most on Trees for fear of Tigers.

This Tract in former times possessed by the Kings of Siam, about the year 1258. became a Kingdom of it self; founded by Paramisera, and some other of the Javan Nobility, who flying the tyranny of their own King, came into this Country, where they were lovingly received by Sangeffinga, then reigning under the Siamite in Sinapura. Him they perfidiously slew, and invested Paramisera in his Dominion. Oured of which by the King of Siam, he was forced to seek a new dwelling, and after two or three Removes, fell upon the place where Malaca now standeth, which City, pleased with the commodiousness of the situation, he is said to have built. The trade of Sinapura in short time removed hither also, which so increased the Wealth and power of the Kings hereof, that joyning with the Moors, who began to plant themselves on the shores adjoining, and receiving withall the Law of Mahomet, they began to cast off all subjection to the Kings of Siam, to whom the Son and Successor of Paramisera had submitted his new-raised Kingdom, and became their Homager. Incensed wherewith, the Siamite about the year 1500. sent out a Navy of 200 Sail to distress it by Sea, and an Army of 30000 men and 400 Elephants to besiege it by Land. But before he was able to effect any thing, hindered by Tempests, and the inficiencies of some of his Souldiers, the Portugals in the year 1511. under the conduct of Albuquerque had possessed themselves of it, who built there a Fortress and a Church. And though Aldinus the Son of the expelled King (whose name was Mahomet) endeavoured the regaining of his Estate, and that the Saracens, Hollanders, and the Kings of Jor and Achen (two neighbouring Princes) envying the great fortunes of the Portugals, have severally and successively laboured to deprive them of it: yet they still keep in defiance of all opposition which hath been hitherto made against them.

2. North unto that of Malaca lieth the Kingdom of JOR, JOR, or JOHOR, so called of Jor, or Johor, the chief City of it. Inhabited for the most part by Moors, or Saracens, Mahometanism by their means prevailing on the Natives of the Country also. A Kingdom of no great extent, but of so much power, that joyning his Land-forces with the Navy of the King of Achen, he besieged Malaca, and built a Royal Fort before it: in which, when taken by Paul de Lima by the defeat of this King, were found 900 pieces of brass Ordnance. After this, picking a quarrel with the King of Pahan, he burnt his Houses, Barns, Provisions, and the Suburbs of the City it self: but in the course of his affairs was interrupted by the King of Achen (one of the Kings in the Isle of Sumatra) his old confederate, who after 29 dayes siege took the City of Jor. What afterwards became of this King or Kingdom, I am not able to resolve. In former times it did acknowledge him of Siam for the Lord in Chief.

3. More Northward yet lieth the Kingdom of PATHANE, denominated from Patane the chief City of it: but different from Patane in the other India, as Cleveland in Yorkshire from Cleveland in Germany; or Holland in the Low-Countries from Holland in Lincolnshire, as hath been fully shewn before. The City made of Wood and Reed, but artificially wrought and composed together: the Mosquit onely (most of the people being Mahometans) is built of Brick. The Chinoise make a great part of the Inhabitants of it, infomuch that in this small City there are spoke three Languages, viz. the Chinese, used by that people; the Malayan (or language of Malaca) which is that of the Natives; and the Siam, to the King whereof this small Crown is Fendatory. Built of such light stuff and combustible matter, it must needs be in great danger of fire; and was most miserably burnt in the year 1613. by some Javan Slaves in revenge of the death of some of their Fellows: at which time the whole City was consumed with fire, the Mosquit, the Queens Court, and some few Houses, excepted only. The Country governed of late years by Queens, who have been very kind to the English and Hollanders, granting them leave to erect their Factories in Patane. Not memorable for any great exploit by them performed, but that a late Queen a little before that dismal fire, offended with the King of Pan or Pahan, who had married her Sister, and reigned in a little Island not far off, she sent against him a Fleet of 70 Sail, and 4000 men: by which compelled to correspond with her desires, he brought his Queen and her Children with him to make up the breach.

4. The Kingdom of SIA M, strictly and specially so called, is situate on the main-land (the rest before described being in the Chersonese) betwixt Cambodia on the East, Pegu on the West, the Kingdom of Muantay on the North, and the main Ocean on the South. The chief Cities of it, 1 Sacotai, memorable for a Temple made wholly of metall 80 spans in height, raised by one of the Kings; it being the custom of this Country, that every King at his first coming to the Crown, is to build a Temple; which he adorned with high Steeples, and many Idols. 2 Quedao, renowned for the best Pepper, and for that cause very much frequented by foreign Merchants. 3 Tavay, upon the Sea-coast where it joyneth to Pegu. Whence measuring along the shores till we come to Champa, before mentioned, being all within the Dominions of the King of Siam (not reckoning the Chersonese into this Account) we have a Sea-coast of the length of 600 leagues. 4 Lugor, upon the Sea-side also, near that little Isthmus, which joyneth the Chersonese to the land; from whence to Malaca is 600 miles fall all along the coast. 5 Calantan, the head City of a little Kingdom, but subject to the Crown of Siam. 6 Siam, the chief City of this part of the Kingdom, which it giveth this name to. A goodly City, and very commodiously seated on the River Menam, for Trade and Merchandise. So populous and frequented by foreign Nations, that besides the Natives, here are said to be thirty thousand households of Arabians. The Houses of it high built, by reason of the Annual deluge, during which time they live in the Upper-rooms; and unto every house a boat for the use of the family. Those of the poorer sort dwell in little sheds, made of Reed and Timber; which they remove from place to place for the best convenience of their Markets. And yet so strong, that being belieged by the Tanguan Conqueror, then King of Pegu, An. 1567. with an Army of fourteen hundred thousand fighting men, for the space of 20 months together; it resolutely held good against him: not gained at last by force, but Treason, one of the Gates being set open to him in the dead time of the night, and by that means the City taken. The people hereof are thought to be inclining to Christianity; but hitherto so ill instructed in the principles of it, that they maintain, amongst many other strange opinions, that after the end of 2000 years, (from what time I know not) the world shall be consumed with fire; and that under the ashes of it shall remain two Eggs, out of which shall come one man and one woman, who shall people the world anew.

5 MUANTAY the last of these Kingdoms, lieth betwixt Jangoma and Siam; memorable for nothing more than the City of Odia, or Udie, the principal of all the Kingdoms of Siam, and the usual residence of those Kings. Situate on the banks of the River Calpumo, and containing in it 400000 Inhabitants, of which 50000 are trained to the wars, and in continual readiness for present service. For though this King be Lord of nine several Kingdoms, yet he useth none of them in his wars but the natural Siamites, and those of this City and the rest of his Subjects of Muantay. It is said that for the use of this City only (being feated like Venice upon many little Islands not bridged together) there are no fewer than 200000 Skiffes, and Shallops; serving to waite the people from one place to another. By means hereof of great strength, and almost impregnable. But being being beleaguered by the Tanguan or Bramain Conquerour with ten hundred thousand fighting men (an Army big enough to have buried a greater City than this, if every man had but cast a shovel full of earth upon it) it was won at last.

The Government of these Kings of Siam, was absolute heretofore, if not tyrannical, he being sole Lord of all the Land in his Kingdoms; which he either gave to his Nobles, or Farmed out to Husbandmen, during life or pleasure, but never passed over unto any the right of Inheritance. And these he grants unto his Subjects, besides rents in money, upon condition to maintain a determinate number of Horse, Foot, and Elephants: thereby enabled without further charge unto the Subject, to levy 20000 Horse, and 250000 Foot for present service; besides far greater numbers out of the residue of his people, if occasion be. And for his ordinary Guard he was said to keep 6000 Souldiers, and 200 Elephants, of which Beasts he is reported to have 50000, of which every tenth Elephant is trained up to the war. By reason of so great a power he became Master of the Realms of Cambodia, and Champa; held those of Malacha, Jor, Pahan, and Patane, as his Vassals and Tributaries; with that of Jangoma and the Laos, under his protection. But when the fatal time was come, and that his City of Siam was betrayed to the King of Pegu, he poisoned himself upon the news: his Son becoming Tributary to the Peguan Victor. This Son of his, too much a Prince to be a Subject, revolted from a Son of the Peguan, a vicious and tyrannical King, degenerating from the gallantries of so worthy a Father by whom he was besieged in Siam with 900000 fighting men. Unable to resist his Army if he had presently declared such a resolution, he entertained the King with Treaties, and promises of delivering the City to him, till the third month after, (which was March); when ordinarily the River was to overflow all the Country, for 120 miles about; by which sudden and violent inundation, and the Sword together (the Siamites waiting diligently for the opportunity) there perished all of this great Army, except 70000. After this blow, the conquering Siamite, Anno 1600. besieged and endangered the City of Pegu, of which more anon: and dying in the year 1605. left his estate unto his Brother. Whose Son succeeding, settled a Factory in Siam of the English Merchants, Anno 1612. and was in a fair way of obtaining the sovereignty of Pegu, then destroyed and waited, if the violent and unrelenting coming of the King of Burma had not crossed him in it: to whom now subject with the rest of the Indian Princes, on that side of the River.

6. PEGU.

PEGU is bounded on the East, with Jangoma, and a part of Siam; on the North, with the Kingdoms of Bramai, on the West and South, with the Kingdom and Gulf of Bengala. So called from Pegu the chief City, as that by the name of the River upon which standeth. Divided commonly into the Kingdoms and Estates of 1 Vermi, 2 Macin, 3 Orrachan, 4 Martavan, and 5 Pegu specially so called.

Pegu.

1. VERMA is the name of a small Kingdom bordering upon Bengala; and so denominated from Verma, the chief Town thereof. A Kingdom which hath no Port or Haven at all; and therefore wholly freed of Moors and Mahometans, which can be said of no other of these Indians Kingdoms.

The People black, naked above the Waiste, and covered beneath it only with a veil of Cotton; in matter of Religion, Gentiles; and in war right valiant. This last apparent by the long and frequent wars which they had with the Peguans; to whom made tributary in conclusion, but not fully conquered.

2. MACHIN, so called from Macin the chief City thereof, is another of these Peguan Kingdoms. Of small esteem, but for the great quantity of the Sweet-wood, by the Latins called Lignum Vita, by the Natives Calamba, so much in use for Funerals and Bathes, (as was said before) held also by the Indians for a sovereign and unparallel'd Medicine against many dangerous diseases; great quantities whereof are brought hence yearly by the Merchant. One of the first Kingdoms which was conquered by the King of Burma, (upon whom it bordereth) in the beginning of his Fortunes.

3. ORACHAN, or Arrachan, lieth on the West of Macin, and the South of Verma; environed round with Mountains, and impassable Woods. Chief Towns whereof, 1 Dianga, taken and destroyed by the Portugals, in the quarrels betwixt them and the King of Arrachan, An. 1608. 2 Sundiva, likewise in an Island unto which it gives name, six leagues off from the Continent of Bengala, to which it formerly belonged. Subdued by the Portugals, An. 1602. and from them taken by this King about two years after, and made a member of his Kingdom. The Island 30 leagues in compass, very strong, fruitful, and the Town well fortified. 3 Arrachan the head City, which gives name to all, distant from the Sea 45 miles, but seated on a large and capacious River. The King and Kingdom of no note, till the ruins of Pegu, to the Crown whereof it once pertained. In the Desolation of which State the King hereof combining with him of Tangu, besieged the second Peguan King in the Castle of Alcao; and had betwixt them the whole pillage of that wealthy City, together with the possession of the best Towns of it. After this victory, he returned to Arrachan, in triumph, leading with him the white Elephant of the King of Pegu, sumptuously adorned; the brother and two sons of the Peguan following in the Pugant. A solemn and magnificent entry. The better to assure himself of his new Dominions, this King bestowed upon him who had taken his son, and put him to a grievous ransom; they brake out into open wars. In the pursuit whereof, after many losses, the King recovered from them the Isle of Sandiva; and manning out a Fleet of 1200 sail (of which 75 were of so great burden, as to carry every one, twelve pieces of Ordnance) and in that Fleet 30000 Souldiers, 8000 hand-guns, and 3500 greater pieces, besieged the fortress: assisted in that action also by the King of Tangu. And though he failed in his design, yet like enough he had prevented the King of Ava, who took it in the year 1613 as before is said, had he not been outed in the mean time of his own Kingdom, by the King of Burma: of whose great rise, the conquering of the Realms of Macin and Arrachan, were the first foundation.

4. MARTAVAN, the richest of these Kingdoms, lieth South to Arrachan, a little turning towards the West. The soyl so fertile, that it yieldeth three Harvests in a year; and sent annually fifteen Ships to Cochin, and as many to Malaca, laden with Rice. Rich also in Mines of Iron, Lead, Steel, Brass, Silver, Gold, and Rubies, and very liberally provided of Springs and Rivers. The Forests well-stored with Harts, Bores, and Buffoles; store of Pines and Palms: the woods with Sugar-Canes, many excellent fruits; the ordinary herbs and shrubs either medicinal or odoriferous. The principal City it called also Martavan, lieth upon an Haven open at all times of the year, and not choaked with sands, as usually other Havens are in the Indian winter: of great trading, much splendor, and a temperate air. Faithful unto the last to the Crown of Pegu, to the Kings whereof their own were subject; and in that constancy they twice repulsed the King of Siam, who then had conquered the most part of the Kingdom of Pegu. Angry whereat, the Siamite caused two of his cowardly Captains to be cast into a Chaldron of scalding Oyl; and at the third Assault became of Matter it. Bannalaum the old King hereof (99 years old) with his heir apparent, and 200000 of his Subjects being compelled to hide themselves in the Woods and Desarts.

5. PEGU, the most predominant Kingdom, lieth like a Crescent or half-Moon on the Gulf of Bengala; extending on that coast from Negrals unto Tavan, the next Town of Siam, for the space of three hundred miles, and upwards; but little less in breadth, if not quite as much. So called from the River Pegu, which runs through the middle of it, and gives this name also unto Pegu the most noted City.

The Soyl hereof exceeding fruitful, by reason of the annual overflowings of the River, which do yearly fatten it, fit to bear wheat, and of Rice yielding an incredible quantity. It affordeth also many Rubies, great numbers of Civet-Cats, plenty of Lacca, (a Gum there made by Ants, as here Bees make wax) store of Elephants, and abundance of Parats which speak plainer, and are much fairer than in any place else.

The people of a mean stature, somewhat corpulent, and naturally beardless. If any stragling hair thrust forth, they always carry Pinners with them, to pull them out. Nimble and strong, but yet not very fit for war; spending too much of their strength in the love of women, to which most passionately addicted. They black their teeth, because they say that dogs teeth be white; & wear no cloaths but on their heads and

and about their nakedness. Said by the Jews to be descended from some of the Tribes of Israel, confined hither by Solomon: but by the Peguans themselves, to be begotten of a Dog and a China woman, which were saved here upon a Shipwrack. By Religion for the most part Gentiles, imagining innumerable worlds one after another, and a determinate number of Gods for every world: more Orthodox, in assigning after this life according to the merits of the party deceased, one place of Torments, and another of Delights and pleasures, if they had not added a third also for satisfaction.

Chief Cities of this Kingdom, 1 Casui, seated in a Territory full of Woods, as those Woods of Tigers, Wild Bores, Apes and Parats; the houses made of Canes, which serve here for timber, (some of them being as big as Hogs-heads) covered over with thach. 2 Jicabel, a great City on the River Pegu. 3 Dian, on the same River also, where they make Barks or Vessels as big as Galeasses; which serve both for trade and habitation. 4 Coilan, a City four-square, and each square four miles. 5 Lanagon, a pleasant Town, and full of Palm-trees. 6 Dala, in which were the Kings Stables for his ordinary Elephants: his four White Elephants (for so many he had) being always kept about the Court, not seen abroad, but in great solemnities, when trapped in furnitures of Gold; and no less honoured by the people, than the King himself; called therefore King of the White Elephant, by the neighbouring Princes. 7 Silvaupede, where many victualing Barks are made to serve for dwelling on the Sea. 8 Meccao, where they use to unload such goods, as are to pass by Land to Pegu. Neighbour'd by the strongest Cattle in all this Kingdom, and therefore chosen by the King for his place of Retreat, when distressed by the Kings of Arrachan, and Tangu. To the last of which making choice to yield up his person, with his Wife and Children, because he had married him to his Sister, he was by him perfidiously and basely murdered. 9 Sirlangh, a strong piece on the mouth of the River, given by the King of Arrachan to the Portugals; and by them committed to the keeping of Philip de Britto, in the year one thousand six hundred, or thereabouts. Who having made it good against him, and the King of Tangu his Associate for the space of thirteen years together, was at last forced to yield himself prisoner to the King of Ava, by whom cruelly tortured on a spit. 10 Pegu, the glory of these parts, great, strong, and beautiful: Divided into two Towns, the Old and the New; the Old inhabited by Merchants, the new by the King and his Nobility. The houses made of Wood, but covered with Tiles; a Coco-Tree before every house yielding a comfortable shade, and a pleasant shew. The streets as straight as any line, and so broad that ten or twelve men may ride abreast in the narrowest of them. In figure square, each square having five Gates, besides many Turrets; all of them beautifully gilded. The whole well walled with walls of stone environed on all sides with great Ditches; and in the midst the Royal Palace, walled and ditched about, most sumptuously gilded: but specially the Temple or Idol-chappel, the walls whereof were hid with Gold, the Roof tiled with Silver.

In this magnificent Palace lived the Peguan Kings, in as much pomp and pleasure as the world could yield: his Empire not extending only over these Kingdoms now described, but over all the Provinces or Kingdom of the Bramones also; which he governed by his several Vice-Roys, or rather TRIBUTARIE Kings. A happiness too great to continue long. For in the year 1567, the Vice-Roy or Tributary King of Tangu, by the aid of his faction, and reputation of his virtues, entered into rebellion, and slaying the Nobles of the Land, usurped that Kingdom. After this he subdued the Cities and Kingdoms of Calin, Melinay, Prom, Miranda, and Ava, inhabited all of them by the Bramones, and therefore taking to himself the title of the King of Brama, because his fame and fortunes took their rise from his victories over them: Following the course of his successes, he first assailed the Cities of Odia, and Siam, but repulsed with loss. To make amends for which misfortune, he beleaguered Pegu, and subdued it; and by the reputation which he got in that action, returning to the siege of Siam, had yielded it to him. Dying he gave the Kingdom of Ava unto one of his brothers; that of Prom, to one of his Grandsons; the Kingdom of Jangoma, to a younger son, but born after the time of his obtaining the Crown of Pegu; and finally that of Pegu, with the Sovereignty over all the rest, to his eldest son, a Prince of vicious and tyrannical nature; and not more cruel to his Subjects, than they disobeyed him. Whereupon preparations are made on both sides, the people to defend their liberty, the King to preserve his Royalty. During these civil discords, the titular King of Siam, whose late overthrow was not yet fully digested, came violently into the Country of Pegu; burning Corn, Grass, and Fruits, killing man, woman, and child, and having satisfied his Fury, returned to his home. This spoil of the fruits of the Earth, was but a prologue to an unsupportable famine, which consumed all the Inhabitants of this flourishing Kingdom, except such whom the Gramaries of the City of Pegu preserved, Anno 1598. For here the Fathers devoured their children, the stronger preyed upon the weaker; not only devouring their more fleshy parts, but their entrails also; nay they broke the up skulls of such as they had slain, and sucked out their brains. This calamity incited another Tributary Prince of Tangu, to make his best advantage out of his neighbours affliction; though made his brother-in-Law, and advanced to great honours by his Father. For justly fearing the displeasure of his angry Prince, to whose aid he had refused to come, when sent for by him, he joyned himself with the King of Arrachan, besieged his Lord and Sovereign in the Fort of Meccao. Brought to extremities, the unfortunate Prince, thought best to put himself into the hands of his brother of Tangu, who assailed and entered Pegu, where he found as much treasure as 600 Elephants, and as many Horses could conveniently carry away; this havock being made, he villainously murdered the King, Queen, and their Children, and departed; leaving the gleaming of his spoil to the King of Arrachan: who, Anno 1600, was expelled by the King of Siam, who enjoyed it not long. For the King of Burma having with an Army of an hundred thousand fighting men, and four-ty thousand Elephants, subdued the Kingdoms of Macin, and Arrachan, followed the currents of his Victories; conquered Siam, drove the King thereof from PEGU; where he hath built a most Magnificent Palace: and is now the sole Monarch of the twelve Kingdoms of this India.

A more particular relation of this King, and his new-settled Estate, we cannot yet understand: what his Revenues are, what his Government, what his Forces. Merchants, whose inquisitiveness into the State-Matters of other Princes, is dangerous to their trading; cannot give us any full satisfaction: Scholars and Statists are not permitted to observe; and such of the Natives as could give us the most light, are not suffered to travel. Only we may conjecture by the great wealth of those several Princes, and the vast Armies by them raised in their several Territories; that his Annual Revenues, Casualties, and united Forces must be almost infinite.

And so much for INDIA.

The Oriental Islands.

THE ORIENTAL ISLANDS, so called from their situation in the Oriental, or Eastern Seas, may be divided into the Islands of 1 Japan, 2 the Philippina, and Isles adjoining, 3 the Islands of Bantam, 4 the Moluccoes, 5 those called Sinde, or the Celebes, 6 Java, 7 Borneo, 8 Sumatra, 9 Ceylan, and 10 certain others, of less note.

I. JAPAN.

JAPAN is an aggregate body of many Islands, separated by small Gulfs, Streights, and turnings of the Sea; but taking name from Japan, the chief of all. Some reckon them to be 66. in all; others ascribe that number to so many Kingdoms, into which these Islands (be they in number more or less) use to be divided. But whatsoever the number be (the certainty whereof I can no where find) there are three only of account, to which the several petit Kingdoms are now reduced: that is to say, 1 Japan specially so called, which containeth 53 Kingdoms, of which 26 are under the King of Memo, 12 under the King of Amagance, the other 15 under other Princes of inferior note. II. Ximo, which containeth in it nine Realms, the principal whereof are those of Bungo and Figen. III. Xicomu, which comprehendeth four only of these petit Seigneuries.

JAPAN, the chief of all these Islands, to which the residue may be accounted of but as Appurtenances, is situate over against the Streights of Anian, (if such Streights there be) towards which it looketh to the North: distant from New Spain on the East 150 leagues, or 450 English miles; and 60 leagues, from Canton, a Province of China, opposite to it on the West. On the South it hath the vast Ocean, and those infinite shoals of Islands which are called the Philippina, and the Isles neighbouring upon them. Extending in length from West to East 200 leagues, but the breadth not proportionable thereunto: in some places not above ten leagues over, and in the broadest parts but thirty.

The Country Mountainous and barren, but of a very healthy air, if not too much subject unto cold: yet in some places they have Wheat ripe in the month of May; but their Rice, which is their principal sustenance, they gather not before September. The surface of the Earth, clothed with woods and forests, in which some Cedars of so tall and large a body, that one of them only is sufficient to make a Pillar for a Church: the bowels of it stored with divers metals, and amongst others with such inexhaustible mines of gold, that Paulus Venetus reporteth some of the Palaces of their Kings to be covered, in his time, with sheets of gold, as ours in Europe are with lead. But I find no such matter in our latter travellers. Their fields and Meadows full of Cattle, but hitherto not made acquainted with the making of Butter; their fens much visited by wild Ducks, as their house-yards with Pigeons, Turtles, Quails, and Pullen.

The People for the most part of good understanding, apt to learn, and of able memories; cunning and subtle in their dealings. Of body vigorous and strong, accustomed to bear Arms until 60 years old. Their complexion of an Olive-Colour, their beards thin, and the one half of the hair of their heads shaved off. Patient they are of Pain, ambitious of glory, incapable of suffering wrong, but can withal dissemble their resentments of it till opportunity of revenge. They reproach no man for his poverty, so it come not by his own unthriftiness, for which cause they detest all kinds of gaming, as the ways of ill-husbandry; and generally abhor Slandering, Theft, and Swearing. Their mourning commonly is in white, as their feasts in black; their teeth they colour black also to make them beautiful: they mount on the right side of the Horse, and sit (as we are used to rise) when they entertain. In Physick they eat salt things, sharp and raw; and in their salutations, they put off their shoes. The very Antipodes of our world in customs, though not in site: and the true Type or Figure of the old English Puritan, opposite to the Papists in things fit and decent, though made ridiculous many times by that opposition. In other things they do much resemble those of China, if not the more ceremonies of the two: washing their Infant-children in the nearest River, as soon as born; and putting off their shoes when they go to meat.

The People have but one language, but that so intermingled with the words of other Nations, that it seems rather to be many languages than one. They have long used the Art of Printing, which probably enough they might have from China: the Characters whereof are a kind of Brachygraphy, and signify not only letters, but some whole words also. In matter of Religion, Gentiles, adoring anciently the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven; and giving divine honour to wild beasts, and the Stags of the Forests: but specially

Banda.

3. The Isles BANDAN.

THE Isles of BANDAN are in number seven, that is to say 1 Mira, 2 Rosalargium, 3 Ali, 4 Rom, 5 Norra, 6 Gannape, the last of all, continually burning, and for that cause deserted of its inhabitants; and 7 Bandan, bigger than any of the rest, and therefore giving name to all. Situate South of the Philippines, in the seventh degree of Southern Latitude. More fruitful of Nutmegs, than any other of all these parts, for which cause never without the concurrence of foreign Merchants from Java, Malacca, and China; and of late times from these Northern Countries of Europe also. Where by the way, the Nutmeg-tree is like a Peach, or Peach-tree, the innermost part whereof is the Nutmeg itself, covered over with a thin film or coat, which we call by the Arabian name of Maciz, or Mace; and over that the fruit it self, as it is in Peaches, Malacotons, and such fruits as those.

The People barbarous and rude, slothful, of weak bodies, and dull of wit; living confusedly together without rule or order. Some of them still continue in their ancient Paganism; but the greatest part are thought to be Mahometans; in which Religion very zealous, and so devout, that they will not go unto their work or worldly businesses, till they have visited the Mosquits, and done their devotions. A shame or Pattern shall I say in this, unto many Christians! All of them bloody and revengeful; but yet so far from wronging the body of a Dead Enemy, that they use to bury it with sweet Odours.

Some Towns they have, of which the principal, 1 Nera, and 2 Lontoor, joyned in a league against the rest; the quarrel rising from the cutting down of certain trees, proceeding to the butchery of one another, and ending in the loss of their common liberty. Subject in shew to the King of Butone, one of the Moluccoes, but too much at their own disposing. They had not else entered into quarrels with one another. Which opportunity being taken by the watchful Hollanders, they did not only settle four Factories there; but for the security of their trade, and to awe the Natives, they have built three Forts. They had also turned one of their Mosquits to a Fortress. Whereat the people were so incensed that they promised liberty to their Slaves, to get them out of it: who falling desperately on, fired it over their heads, and killed every man of them. The English Merchants have some trading also in these Islands, more acceptable than the other, because not so insolent, and grounding their possession on a better title; the people of Lontore, voluntarily submitting themselves to the protection of King James, the first Monarch of the British Islands, and to his use giving possession of their Country to Captain Robert H. yes, Novemb. 24. 1620. The like done at the same time by the Inhabitants of Wayre, and Rosfingeng, two other Islands, which if they be not the same with those of Mira, and Rosalorgium spoken of before, are probably some lesser Islands, neighbouring to Poleon and Poolaway, of which more hereafter.

There is not far off another Island, not in this accompt, called Timor, situate in the tenth degree of Southern Latitude; the chief of many little Islands which lie round about it; but not else observable, except it be for that abundance of Sanders both white and yellow, which growing there, is greedily exchanged by the Inhabitants for Iron, Hatchets, Swords, Knives, and the like commodities.

4. The MOLUCCOES.

THE MOLUCCOES are in number many; the King of Terenate which is one of them, being said to have dominion over 70 Islands; but the determinate number of them I do no where find. Situate on both sides of the Aequator, and consequently of an hot and intemperate air: the soil so dry and spongy, that it sucketh up the greatest shewre of Rain that doth fall amongst them, before it can pass into the Sea. Not very well furnished with necessaries for the life of man; but that defect supplied with the abundance of Spices which are growing here, Cinnamon, Ginger, Nutmegs, Mastic, Aloes, Pepper, and the like commodities; for which, the Merchants bring them all things that the Country wants. But 'tis the Clove, which is the great Riches of these Islands, and peculiar in a manner to them. A Spice, which groweth on Trees, like Bay-trees yielding blossoms, first white, then green (at which time they yield the pleasantest smell in the world) and last of all red and hard, which are the Cloves. Of nature so extreme hot that if a Pail of water should only stand in the room in which they are cleaned and sorted, the Cloves in two days would dry it up. Of which nature the unspun Silks of China are affirmed to be.

The People for the most part Idolaters, intermixt with some Mahometans dwelling on the shores; and of late times with Christians in their several Factories. Of several Originals, and different languages, but all in general fraudulent, perfidious, treacherous, inhumane, and of noted wickedness. Few of them clothed, nor much caring to hide their shame. Not civilized by the cohabitation of more modest and civil Nations. Pity such ill conditions should be lodged in such handsome bodies: the people being said to be better proportioned than the other Indians; and for strength and valour not followed by any of them.

Of all the Islands which pass under this name, there are not above five or six of any reckoning; that is to say, 1 Terenate, 2 Tidor, 3 Macir, 4 Rackian, 5 Muchian, and 6 Botone: none of them above six leagues in compass, many not so much; the whole cluster of them thronged together in a girdle of no more than 25 leagues in the circumference, yet of such consequence & importance, that the two famous voyages of Americus Vesutius, and Ferdinand Magellanus, the first employed by Emanuel King of Portu- gall, the other by Charles Emperour and King of Spain, were undertaken only to find out the next way unto them.

Of the rest, Muchian and Tidore have their proper Kings; so hath Botone also, if that be one of them; the King whereof had antiently some title and authority over those of Bandan-Macir, and Muchian, are subject to the King of Terenate, who is a Mahometan in Religion, and said to be the Lord of 70 Islands. This the most puissant Member of this scattered body; and for that cause most aimed at by all Competitors; the Spaniards having here one Fortress, and the Hollanders three: both Nations hated by the Natives, whom they consume and waste in the wars betwixt them; but of the two the Spaniard looked on by the people as the more a Gentleman; the other stomached and despised for their forbidden dealings. Nothing else memorable in the story of Chorographie of them, but that they were discovered by the conduct of Magellanus, in the reign of Charles the fifth, who employed him in it, An. 1519. And that there is in Terenate a prodigious Mountain, in height above the clouds of the Air, and in nature agreeing with the Element of Fire, which it seems to mount to; huge flames whereof, with dreadful Thunders, and a dark smok, it sends forth continually. Reckoned by some amongst these Islands, but howsoever neighbouring near them, are those of Poleone, and Poolaway; the first more plentiful of Cloves, the second more proper for the Nutmeg, but both acknowledging the Sovereignty of the Kings of England; for Poleone by the general and voluntary Act of all the chief men of the Country, was surrendered into the power of King James, the possession of it being given for his Majesties use to Captain Courttop, Decemb. 23. An. 1616. no other Nation at that time having any interest in it, or Pretensions to it, which notwithstanding it was not long after seized on by the insolent and ungrateful Hollanders, who being to restore it upon Composition, cut down all the Clove-trees, so to deprive the English of the benefit of them. Poolaway made the like surrender at the same time also, declared by setting up the English colours on the top of their Castle, giving to Courttop a green turf (whereby as by Livery and Seitin) to take possession of the Country, promising the annual tribute of a branch of Nutmegs, and that they should sell neither Mace nor Nutmegs to any, but to those of the English Nation. The like done also at or near the same time, by Wayre and Rosfingeng, two other Islands of these Seas, which if they be not those two of Bandan, pointed at before, must needs be brought within the number of this scattered Company.

5. The SINDÆ or SELEBES.

NEAR the Moluccoes, and almost intermingled with them, are a set of Islands which Ptolomy calleth SINDÆ, and the Moderns, SELEBES; many in tale, but not above four of any neighbour, that is to say, 1 SELEBES, 2 Gilolo, 3 Amboina, 4 Mavasser; of which the two first are situate under the Aequator, and the last somewhat on the South of it: all of them in time of Ptolomy inhabited by Anthrophophagi, and a long time after; in so much as the Kings of the Moluccoes, did use to send their condemned perions into these Islands, there to be devoured. Which said in general, we will take a more particular view of them, as they lie before us.

1. SELEBES, which gives name to the rest, and hath under it many lesser Islands, is large and rich. The soil thereof exceeding fertile, the people tall and comely, and of colour, not so much black as ruddy. Much given to Piracy, and all Idolaters till of late. Governed by many Kings or petty Princes, the cause of much contention, and many quarrels: three of which are said to have been converted to Christianity, and for that cause much hated by their heathenish Subjects, who thereupon rebelled against them. It is situate West of the Moluccoes, and hath therein a Town called Sion, honoured with the abode of one of their Christian Kings: but possibly not so called until their conversion; the proper name thereof being Cian. 2 Nilon, in the South, and 3 Terolli in the North parts of it.

2. GILLOLO, called also Batachina, is one of those Islands, which our late Navigators include under the name of Del Moro. Of large extent, conceived to be half as big as Italy. By that accompt (the truth whereof I do very much doubt) greater than Zeilan is in compass, though of less reputation: that being governed by its own Princes, this subject for the most part to the King of Terenate. Situate East of the Moluccoes, exceeding plentiful of Rice, well stored with wild Hens, and on the shores provided of a kind of Shell-fish, which in taste much resembleth Mutton. A tree they have which they call by the name of Sagu, of the pith whereof they make their bread; and of the sap or juice of it they compose a pleasing drink, which serveth them instead of Wine. The air intemperately hot; the people well proportioned, but rude and savage; some of them Gentiles, some Mahometans, of which last Religion is their King; The chief Town of it is Batchame, or Batachina, (whence the new name unto the Island) in which the Hollanders have a Fort to defend their Factory.

3. AMBOINA, South of the Aequator, and the third of the Sindæ, hath many Islands of less note, which depend upon it, and do communicate in the name. In compass about five hundred miles said by Maginus to be extremely rough and barren; which must be understood with reference to some kinds of grain. For otherwise it is very fertile, abundantly productive of Rice, Citrons, Lemons, Oranges, Coco-nuts, Sugar-Cane, and other fruits; and very plentiful of Cloves. Which last, as it makes some to reckon it amongst the Moluccoes, so may it be the reason why the Island is defective in such fruits as require much moisture: the Clove being of so hot a temper, as before was noted, that it draweth to it all the moisture of the Earth, which is near unto it.

The people much given to Piracy, wherewith they do infect all the neighbouring Islands. Defamed for Cannibals, or man-eaters: it being here a constant custom, that when their Parents were grown old, or sick of any incurable disease, they give them to one another to be eaten by them. They have one Town of more note than other, which they call Amboina, by the name of the Island. First taken by the Portu- gals, and by them secured with a strong fortress: during whose power here, the Jesuites who had in it their several Residences, converted many to Christianity. But in the year 1605, the Island and the Fort both were conquered by Stephen of Hagan, for the States of the United Provinces: who having cleared the Country of the Portuguese Forces, possessed themselves of it. Received by the natives at their first coming, with Joy and Triumphs: but they got little by the change, as they found soon after; their new Masters being more burdensome, and insufferable, than the old had been. For claiming in the right of Conquest, they think they may oppress the Natives by the Law of Arms; and ingross all trade unto themselves as the true Proprietaries. Infamous even amongst the rude and savage Indians for their barbarous inhumanity executed upon some of the English (the greatest Patrons under God which they have in the world) whom in the year 1618, they most cruelly tortured, and most wickedly murdered; under colour of some plot to betray their Fortresses: but in plain truth for no other reason but because they were more beloved by the Inhabitants, and began to gain upon their trade.

4. West of Amboina, and South-West of Celebes, lieth the fourth of these Islands called MACASSAR, said to contain from East to West 600 miles; plentiful of Rice, Flesh, Fish, Salt, and Cotton-Wool; not destitute of Gold and Pearls and well stored with Sandar (Sandalum it is called in Latin) a medicinal wood, growing like a Nut-tree: of several colours, white, red, yellow, but the red, the best: the fruit in making like a Cherry, but of no esteem. In some parts overgrown with woods, in which certain fiery Flies make nightly such shining light, as if every twig or bough were a burning Candle. In the middle covered with high Mountains, out of which flow many navigable Rivers.

The people for the most part Gentiles, intermixt on the Sea-coasts with some Mahometans. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Sendere, the Kings Seat, situate near a large Lake, very commodiously for traffick. 2 Macassar, an English Factory, so called according to the name of the Island.

Near to these Islands, and somewhat North to Batachina are some other Isles, plentiful of all things necessary for the life of man, but inhabited by a thievish and Piratical people: the principal of which 1 Ternio, 2 Sanguin, 3 Solor, 4 Moratay, in which last they eat Battata Roots instead of bread, besides some others of less note. Most of the people Gentiles, except those of Sanguin, the King whereof being gained to the Christian Faith, by some of the Jesuites, hath brought many of his subjects to the same Religion.

6 BORNEO.

West of these Celebes, lieth BORNEO, of more note and greatness, than any hitherto described, in these Indian Seas. In compass, after their account who speak most sparingly, 2200 miles; but as some say, no less than three months sail about. Situate under the Aequator, which parteth the dominions of the King of Borneo, and the King of Lau: opposite on the North to Camboja; on the South, to Java; on the East, to Celebes; on the West, unto the Isle of Sumatra.

The Country said to be provided naturally of all things necessary; yet said withal to be unfurnished of Asses, Oxen, Herds of Cattel, except only Horses, and these but of small stature neither: the greatest riches of it being Campfire, Agarick, and some mines of Adamants erroneously conceived by Mercators to be the Insula bona Fortune spoken of by Ptolomy; that being seated opposite to the outlets of Ganges, in the Latitude of a hundred forty five Degrees, and fifteen minutes; this Eastward some Degrees of the Golden Chersonese, and consequently twenty Degrees distant at the least from that Island in Ptolomy.

The people generally more white than the rest of the Indians, of good wits, and approved integrity, though all Mahometans, or Gentiles. Divided betwixt two Kings, and two Religions: the King of Borneo and his Subjects being all Mahometans; those of Lau still remaining in their ancient Gentilism. These think the Sun and Moon to be man and wife, and the Stars their children; ascribing to each of them divine honours, to the Sun especially; whom they salute at his first rising with great Reverence, saying certain verses. Their publick businesses are treated of commonly in the night, at which time the Counsellors of State meet, and ascend some tree, viewing the Heavens till the Moon rise, and then go to the Senate-house. The same Apparel generally of both Religions; but thin, by reason of the great heat of the Air: a shirt of Silk, or of Calicut, or some such slight stuff, worn more for modesty than for warmth.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Borneo situate in the North-West part of the Island near a goodly bay, but in the middle of the Pens like the City of Venice, and seated as that is, on Piles; the building sumptuous, of hewed stones, covered with the leaves of the Coco-tree. The Town so large as to contain 25000 families. 3 Taiopura, 4 Tamoras. 5 Malano, all of them noted for fair Cities, or commodious Havens. 6 Sagadana, a Factory of English. 7 Lavi, on a large Bay in the South-East part of the Island, the ordinary Seat of the King of Lau. 8 Paro, on another capacious Bay, not far from Lavi, and directly opposite to Borneo: that being seated on the North-West, and this on the South-East of the Island. Betwixt these two Kings is the whole divided; but so, that he of Borneo hath the greatest part of it, and therefore keeps the greater State: not to be spoken with, but by the mouth of some of his own Interpreters; and in his Palace served by no other Attendants, than Maids or Women.

7. JAVA.

Opposite to Borneo towards the South lie the Isles of JAVA, two in number; both situate South of the Aequator, both of great Circumference, and commonly distinguished into Major and Minor, or the greater and the lesser Java.

1. JAVA.

Java.

1. JAVA-MAJOR, the more Northward of the two, and by much the bigger, is said to be in compass 3000 miles, and that by them who elsewhere reckon Borneo for the biggest of these Seas. But the truth is, that the South-parts of this Island not being perfectly discovered, make the measurement thereof to be very uncertain. Conceived most probably to be the Jabadiu of Ptolomy, the most Northern part whereof is placed by him in the eighth degree of Southern Latitude: said by him to afford much gold and silver, to be exceeding fruitful of all other necessities; and finally that the name did signify verre vif, or the Island of Barly. All which agreeeth punctually with the present Island, the word Jabadiu signifying a kind of grain much like our Barly; and Diu in the Persian and Indian tongues signifying an Island. And so in Jabadiu, we have found the Island of Java, the mutation of B. into V. being very ordinary.

Then for the riches and fertility of it, it is said to yield great plenty of Fruits, and Corn, but of Rice especially; flesh of all sorts, salted and sent from hence into other Countries; great store of Fowl, both wild and tame; plenty of Gold, some precious Stones, and the best kind of Brass; Silks in abundance, and great quantities of Pepper, Ginger, Cinnamon, and some other Spices. In a word so befriended by the bounty of Nature, that Scaliger calleth it Epitome Mundi, or the whole World contracted in a lesser Volume. But withal it is much exposed unto storms and tempests, from which seldom free.

The people of a middle Stature, corpulent, and of broad Faces, most of them naked or covered only with a slight silken stuff, and that no lower than the knee; accomplished the most Civil people of all the Indians, as fetching their descent from China: but withal treacherous, very proud, much given to lying, and very careless of their words; to which so used, that they count it not amongst their F-mis. And therefore when a King of theirs had broke promise with the Hollanders, and was challenged for it, he answered that his tongue was not made of bone. Cruel they are also said to be, & implacable, if once offended: accustomed of old to eat the bodies of their friends: accounting no burial so honourable, nor obsequy so applaudive. This also a custom amongst many of the rest of the Indians, and so hath it been ever since the beginning of the Persian Monarchy. Herodotus reporteth how Darius Hystaspes understanding of this custom, and withal knowing how the Gracians use to burn their dead; sent to the Greeks, that it was his pleasure they should eat the bodies of their dead: But they used all means of persuasion and entreaty, not to be forced to so brutish and barbarous a custom. Then commanded he the Indians to conform themselves to the fashion of the Gracians; but they all more abhorred to burn the dead, than the Greeks did to eat them. So impossible it is for a custom either to be suddenly left off, or to seem undecent and inconvenient, if once thoroughly settled.

In matter of Religion they are all Mahometans, or Gentiles, according to the fancy of their several Kings, whereof in this Island there are very many; one for every great Tribe, or more powerful Family. Zealous in their Religion which so ever it be, as appears by the sad story of the Daughter of the King of Ballambua, murdered by her Husband the King of Passarua, the second night after her wedding, with all her Attendants, because they would not be Mahometans, which was his Religion. Yet in some common Principles they agree well enough, punishing Adultery with death; in which case the woman chooseth her nearest Kinsman for her Executioner: but otherwise spending the Day and Night in much Sloth and Dalliance. Of the two, Gentilism is the more diffused, because most ancient; the Sect of Mahomet not being introduced till the year 1560. though of a very swift growth, and of a great increase for so short a time.

Their chief Towns, 1 PANARUCAN, near a burning hill, which in the year 1586. brake forth exceedingly, oppressed infinite numbers of men, and cast great stones into the City for three dayes together. 2 Joriam, a Town of 1000 Households, the Inhabitants whereof are Gentiles, and have their Temples in the Woods: the Chief-Priest of whose superstition hath his dwelling here, of great authority and power over all the Island. 3 Ballambua, 4 Passarua, 5 Taban, 6 Matara, 7 Dannia, 8 Taggal, 9 Surrabia, 10 Gatabaon: the Seats of so many of their Kings; some of them also furnished of convenient Havens. 11 BANTAM, the seat also of a King, but of most trade in all the Island, seldom without the company of English, Portuguese, and Hollanders; the principal Factory of the English in all the Indies, though they have many besides this. The Town unwholesomely seated in a moorish ground, and much subject to fire. 12 Sunda, situate in a place abounding in Pepper. 13 Agracan, a convenient Port; Here was also in the time of Ptolomy a Town called 14 Argyropolis, or the Silver City, long ago destroyed. And now there is, 15 Sura, a new Town in the Territories of the King of Bantan, built by some of the Subjects of the King of Passarua, who being oppressed by their own King, came into this part of the Country, where they got leave to build this City. The people whereof live quietly according to their own Laws, follow their Husbandry abroad, but never marry; and yet do not want a constant Succession, adopting some of the other Javans into their Society, as they find their number to diminish.

Of the story of this Island I can say but little. Divided into many petit and inconsiderate Kingdoms; and those divided too by Mountains; crossing the Island in the middle from West to East, which cut off all commerce and correspondence betwixt one another. Some of these Kings Mahometans, some Gentiles, as before was said; all subject or Homagers at least to one of the Kings of the Gentiles, who hath his dwelling in the midst of the Island. Next him, the King of Tuban was conceived to be richest, and the King of Ballambua of the greatest Territory; whose Family after long war and blood-shed, began in the murder of his Daughter, is said to be wholly rooted out by the King of Passarua. These Kings much revered by their subjects, and so well obeyed, that whatsoever they command, is done, be it never so dangerous.

2. JAVA-MINOR,

Java.

2. JAVA MINOR, situate on the South of the other, is said to be 2000 miles in compass, and to be very near the firm lands of Terra Australis incognita, or the Southern Continent. Not very well known to any of our late Adventurers; but generally affirmed (not so much on certain knowledge as uncertain conjecture) to be of the same nature and condition with the greater Java. The Inhabitants hereof in the time of Pandua Venetum, who had travelled in it, reported to be Cannibals, Idolaters, devourers of their Parents and dearest friends, and to worship all day whatsoever they saw first in the morning. Divided then into eight Kingdoms, distinguished by the names of their principal Towns. Six whereof he had seen, which are these that follow. 1. Felech, where the Townsmen were Moors, and the Peasants, Gentiles. 2. Basma, which did acknowledge the Great-Cham of Tartaria for Lord in chief; but without paying of any tribute. 3. Samara, where none of the North-stars could be seen. 4. Samtri, in which some men were said to have tails like Dogs. 5. Fanfur, in which they have a Tree, the wood whereof put in water, will sink like Iron; of which they use to make Lances that will pierce an Armour. And 6. Dra-gorian, of which there is nothing memorable or prodigious, but that the people of it use to eat their nearest kinsmen; and that no Prodigie at all, because used by others.

To these two we may joyn MADURA, on the North of the greater Java, fertile of Rice, but otherwise of its waterish and moist a Soil, that the men and Cattle use to go knee-deep when they sow it. The chief Town whereof is called Arosbay. And on the East the same Java the Island Baly, exceeding populous for the bigness, supposed to contain 600000 Inhabitants; and very well provided of Bulls, Buffals, Goats, Horses, Swine, many kind of fruits, and some store of metals.

S. SUMATRA.

SUMATRA lieth on the North of the greater Java, betwixt it and the Streight of Sincapura, the most Southern Town of Golden Chersonese. The Streight in that place so freight and narrow, not above a Musket-shot in breadth, that some conceive this Island to have been formerly joyned unto it by some little Isthmus; since worn away by the violence and working of the Sea; and that this Island, and not the Land of Malaca, was that Golden Chersonese, which we find in Ptolemy. More probably by far, than that we should run after it to the Isle of Japan situate on the East of China, so far from any part of India, where it is placed by the Author of the Atlas Minor.

The length hereof, extended from the North-west to the South-East, is said by some to be 900. by others but 700. miles, the breadth 200. and the whole compass one and twenty hundred. Strangely affirmed by some Writers to be the biggest of all the East; who yet assign a greater circuit unto Java, and as great to Borneo. Situate under the Equator, which divideth it into two parts, very near an equality; that on the North-side reaching unto five degrees, that on the South-side but to seven degrees from the line it self. By which account there is little difference betwixt the length of a day and a night; both much at one in all times of the year whatever.

The air hereof by consequence must be very hot, but withal unwholsom: not so much in regard of the extrem heat, as by reason of the gross vapours drawn from the many Fens and Rivers, which are found to be in it; and the thick Woods which intercept the free course of a purging wind. The soil not capable of such grain as in other places, except Rice or Millet (for I know not otherwise how to render the Latine, Millum) but yielding Ginger, Pepper, Camphire, Agarick, and Cassia, in great abundance. It affordeth also great plenty of Wax and Honey, store of Silks and Cottons, rich Mines not only of Tin, Iron, Sulphur, and other Minerals; but of Gold such quantity, that some conceive this Island to be Solomon's Ophir. And if Pedrunks Sirie one of the Kings of this Island, in a letter written to King James did not brag too impudently; it may be probable enough. For by that letter it appeareth that all the furnitures of his house, and trappings of his Elephants and Horses, with all his Armour, were of pure Gold, and that he had in his Dominions a whole Mountain of Gold; King of which Golden Mountain he entitleth himself in his Regal Stile.

The Inhabitants are many of them good Artificers, cunning Merchants, or expert Mariners. All of them Gentiles till about two hundred and thirty years since, at what time by the diligence of some Arabian Merchants trading to this Island, Mahometanism began to spread upon the Coasts. But in the inland parts of the Country they are Gentiles still, and still retain amongst them their old barbarous customs. The most loving men unto their Enemies that were ever known; for otherwise they would never eat them. Having eaten, they use their skulls instead of money, which they exchange or barter for such necessities, as their wants require: and he is thought to be the wealthiest man amongst them, who hath most of this coin. Those of the other Religion, though in most points and customs they agree with the rest of the Mahometans, have this one singular to themselves: which is, that once every year on a certain day they go solemnly unto their Mosquits to see if Mahomet be come, leading a spare Horse for him to ride upon: which (missing him) is mounted at their coming back, by the best man in the company. Of any great Progress that Christianity hath made here, I have no good evidence.

That there are many and great Rivers, hath been said before, but their names I find not. Here are also many Mountains, and those great and high; that of most note called Balabannu, said to burn continually. Out of which, or not far off do arise two Fountains, of which the one is said to run pure Oyl, and the other the best Balsamum: which I bind no man to believe but such as have seen it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1. Achen, the Seat-Royal of that Kingdom; beautified with the Regal Palace, lace, to which they pass thorow seven Gates one after another, with green Courts between the three outermost; those three continually guarded with women expert at their weapons, and using both swords and Guns; the only ordinary guard that he hath for his person. The materials of this Palace mean, but the furniture costly, the walls thereof being hanged commonly with Velvet and Damask, and sometimes with cloth of Gold. 2. Pedir, 3. Pacom, 4. Cambar, 5. Menantabo, 6. Aura, and 7. Andragille, the seats of so many of their Kings. 8. Passaman, a Town of great Trade, but situate in a Moorish and unhealthy place; found so experimentally by too many of the English, who have there their Factory. 9. Priamun, and 10. Tecoo, of a more healthy air, but not so commodious in their Havens as is that of Passaman: these three Towns standing in that part of the Country where the Pepper groweth.

All that we know touching the story of this Country, is, that the Portugals, when they first came hither, found in it nine and twenty Kings; reduced since to a smaller number. For Abraham, sometimes a Slave, afterwards King of Achen, having turned Mahometan, by the help of the Turks and Arabians subdued the Realms of Pedir and Pacom. Aladine who succeeded him, being once a Fisherman and grown famous for his exploits at Sea; was by this King preferred to the marriage of one of his Kinswomen, made his Lord Admiral, and by him trusted with the protection of his son and heir: of whom in stead of a Protector he became the murderer, and usurped the State unto himself. When King, he added to his Crown the Kingdom of Aru, or Aura, and Mamucabo; and almost all the rest in the North part of the Island. In this Kings time, the English were first settled in their Factory there. Grown old (an hundred years at least) he was imprisoned by his eldest Son, impatient of a longer stay, alledging that his age had made him unfit for Government, Anno 1664. The name of the New King, Sultan Pedrucks Sirie, who in his Letter to King James spoken of before, styles himself the sole King of Sumatra: either with greater brags than truth, or else because the Kingdoms of Tecoo, Priamun, and Baronse, being conquered by him, all the rest were become his Tributaries. Associated with the forces of the King of Tora or Iohor, who had married his Sister, he besieged Malaca, and distressed it: But being beaten from it by the Portugals, he turned the tide of his displeasure upon his Confederate, and subdued that Kingdom; who with the King of Siak (some other petty Prince near Tor) and two of their brethren, were in the year 1613 brought Prisoners to Achen.

The Government of this King is absolute, and meerly arbitrary, executing what he hath a mind to, without form of Law. So cautelous, that without his Placard no stranger can have Ingress into his dominions, or free Egress out of them. Nor is admittance to his presence granted unto any whom he first sends not for by an Officer with a Gilded Staff. He is conceived to be strong both by Sea and Land, his Country populous, his Elephants many and well trained, able to put to Sea 120, or if need be 300. Gallies and Frigats fit for any service, most of which carry Demi-Cannon, Culverin, Sakar, Minion, and other the like Ordnance of Brass. So great a Matter of his Subjects, that in 21 dayes he had a goodly Channel drawn about his Palace, from a River which was eight miles off. Of his Revenues, I am able to make no conjecture, but think him to be full of Gold, by that great quantity of Golden Furnitures which he hath about him.

And now I am fallen on this Kings Gold, I cannot but take notice of some Islands on the West of Sumatra, called Anra Insula, or the Golden Islands; the chief of which named Andramanis, is possessed by Cannibals, or Man-eaters. Opposite unto which on the East side of this Island, are those called Linga, Banca, and Bintam; which last is said to be very woody, well watered, and to afford a commodious Station for shipping. The houses built of Stone, but thatched, except that of the King (for even these sorry Islands love to have a King of their own, whose house more eminently seated, is more handsomely covered.

9 ZEILAN.

West of Sumatra, somewhat inclining to the North, is the Island of ZEILAN, ten Degrees distant from the Equator, and near adjoining to the Promontory in the higher India which Ptolemy calleth by the name of Cory. The length hereof computed at 250 miles, the breadth at 150 miles only; the whole circumference at 700 or 800 miles. Conjectured by the situation, and other probable inducements, to be the Taprobane of the ancient Writers. Ortelius and most other intelligent men of these later times are of that opinion. Only Mercator, who hath carried the Golden Chersonese to the Isle of Japan, and fixed Taprobane in that of Sumatra, (in which last I must confess he hath many Partners) will have this Island to be that which Ptolemy calls Nanigeris, though that be four Degrees more West than the Promontory of Cory, to which this Isle in former times seems to have been joyned.

Taking it therefore for an evident and undoubted truth, that this Zeilan or Ceylan is the Taprobane of the Ancients, we will a little look on the State of that Island, with reference to the times when those Authors lived. By Ptolemy affirmed to be plentiful in Rice, Honey, Ginger, Gold, Silver, Precious Stones, and all kind of metals. By Pliny, that the Gold is purer, and the Gems fairer than any in India; that there were also Groves of Palm-trees, and great store of Elephants, is declared by Strabo and some others. Watered with many fair and pleasant Rivers, viz. 1. Sonaa, 2. Azanna, 3. Baracca, 4. Gauders, 5. Phasis: the Hills in many places having a full prospect over the adjoining Valley; the chief of which were Malea, and those called Calibi, the Vales perpetually enriched with the choicest fruits. Exceeding populous for the bigness, and stored with many Towns of note. Of which Magamnum only hath the name of a Metropolis. 1. Alargana, 2. Jogana, 3. Sindocanda, 4. Hodoca, 5. Nabartha, 6. Digana, 7. Dionysopolis, 8. Bocana, 9. Avathu, 10. Procurum, 11. Nagadiba, and 12. Anu-bingara.

An Advertisement to the Reader touching the ERRATA of this PART.

I have adventured to prove the Alamatha of Ptolomy to be the Chamath, or Hamath-Sobab, of the Holy Scriptures: The place ill pointed, but the judicious Reader will easily find out the scope and meaning. Yet if this shall not be approved of, I should then think it to be that Elam or Helam where David discomfited the Army of the Mesopotamians; mention whereof is made 2 Sam. 10. v. 16, 17. In the next place he is to know, that Fol. within the compass of five lines, in the victory which Asa King of Judah obtained against the numerous Army of Ethiopians, is twice repeated: in the first place ascribed to Jethir, in the next to Maresha, (though the other also hath good Authors) let that of Jethir be supplied in this manner following: 5 Jethir, or Jathir, in the North Border of this Tribe towards Eleutheropolis: a City anciently of the Levites, in St. Hieroms time called by the name of Jethira, and then replenished altogether with Christians; now nothing but the name remaining. 6 Maresa, &c. And finally whereas Ajalon, p. is placed in the Tribe of Ephraim, and page in the Tribes of Dan, the reason is, because being situate in the Borders of both Tribes, it is by some Writers ascribed to Dan, and by others to Ephraim. The like may be also said of Michpas, mentioned also in two Tribes according as it is disposed on by several Authors.

COSMOGRAPHIE, The Fourth Book.

PART I.

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY OF A F R I C K,

AND ALL THE Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Isles thereof.

OF A F R I C K.

A F R I C K is bounded on the East by the Red Sea, and Bay of Arabia, by which parted from Asia; on the West, by the main Atlantick Ocean, interpoling betwixt it and America; on the North, by the Mediterranean Sea, which divides it from Europe and Anatolia; and on the South, with the Ethiopic Ocean, separating it from Terra Australis incognita, or the Southern Continent. Parted from all the rest of the World, except Asia only, to which joyned by a narrow Isthmus, not above 60 miles in length, and memorable for the great design which Cleopatra the last Queen of Egypt had upon it, which in brief was this. When Mark Anthony was encountered by Augustus in the Naval battel of Actium, Cleopatra fearing the success, fled through the midt of all his Fleet, with the 60 Gallies which were appointed for her guard. Being come to the North part of this Isthmus, she gathered together all her portable treasures, and intended to hoist her shipping out of the Mediterranean, and hale them over the Land to the Red Sea from whence she had purposed to take sail, and together with her Sweet-heart Anthony, and some other choicest friends, to seek out some other place of dwelling far enough from the Romans. But from this, Anthony who fled after her, and vainly hoped for a change of fortunes, did at last disswade her.

The Form hereof is like a Pyramis reversed; the Basis of which, from Tanger on the Strait of Gibraltar, to the point where it joyneth unto Asia, is reckoned at the breadth of 1920 Italian miles, the Coma of it very narrow. But from the Coma or Pyris to the most Northern part of the Basis, it extendeth it self the space of 415 miles, being much less then Asia, and far bigger then Europe.

By the Grecians it is called most commonly Libya, (of which more hereafter) part of it taken for the whole: by the Ethiopians, Aikebulam; by the Indians, Besicath. But the most noted name thereof is Africa, which Iosephus out of Cleodenus and Polybistor, deriveth from Epher or Apher, one of the Nephews of Abraham, by Midian the son of Keturah. The Arabians, by whom it is called Ifrichea, derive it from the Verb Faruch, signifying to divide; because more visibly divided both from from their own Country, and the rest of the World, than any other part thereof which was known unto them. Some of the Greek Fables fetch it from one Afer, a companion of Hercules, whom he attended unto Spain; some fetch it out of Aphar, an Hebrew word, signifying Dust, agreeable to its sandy and dusty soil: Festus an old Grammarian, from A Privatium, and the Greek word φειν, which imports a Country void of cold, as suitable to the fiery temper of the Air. By Bochartus, who brings all from the old Phœnician, it is said to be derived from Penne, Spica, an ear of Corn; which mollified into Feric, came at last to Africa, that is to say, a Country plentiful in Corn. Which Etymologie of his, may receive some countenance from that great plenty of Corn, which was bred in this Country: especially in those parts hereof which the Romans called the Proper Africk, whereof we shall speak more when we come to Barbary: the whole Continent taking from that Province the name of Africk. But in my mind, (if that from the Hebrew Epher or Aphar, be not worth accepting) I should prefer the Etymon of Festus before any other: unless we might be sure that Carthage anciently was called Africa, as Suidas telleth us it was; for then without all peradventure we would seek no further. For other more particular names by which it hath been called in some older Writers, i. e. Olympia, Oceanica, Eschatica, Coryphe, Ammonia, Hesperia, Ortygia, and perhaps some others, it is enough to our design to take notice of them.

It is situate for the most part under the Torrid Zone, the Aequator crossing it almost in the very midst: and for that cause supposed by many of the Ancients not to be inhabited at all, or but very thinly, in the middle and more Southern parts of it; or if at all, with such strange people, as hardly did deserve to be counted men. Pomponius among others, was of this opinion, guessing the inward parts thereof to be taken up by such strange Brutes, as the Cynophanes, who had heads like dogs; 2 The Scyapodes, who with the shadow of their foot, could and did hide themselves from the heat of the Sun; 3 The Gamosaphantes, a naked people, ignorant of the use of weapons, and therefore fearfully avoiding the sight of men; 4 The Blennyes, who being without heads, had their eyes and mouths in their breasts; The Aripanis, who had no other humane quality to declare them to be men, but the shape and making of their bodies. These people (as they thought) possessed some small portion of the mid-land parts of this great Country; the rest they knew not, or conceived to be uninhabitable, in regard of the great heats thereof. But late discoveries and navigations have found the contrary; the Country proving in most parts to be well inhabited; and the coolness of the nights, by mists, dews, and gentle gales of wind, to mitigate the heat of the day.

Quodque die Solis vehemēti excanduit æstus, Humida nox reficit, paribusque refrigerat horis.

That is to say,

What the Sun burns by day, the Night renews,
And doth as much refresh with moistning dews.

For notwithstanding that it be in some places full of sandy deserts, a disease incident to some parts of Arabia, Persia, and other Countries of a more Northernly situation: yet it is said by some, who speak it upon knowledge, that the greatest part of those Regions which lie under the Line or near it, (both in America and here) have so many goodly Fountains, Rivers, and little Brooks, such abundance of Cedars and other stately Trees of shade, so many sorts of delicate Fruits ever bearing, and at all times beautified with blossoms; as may make them hold comparison with any others, supposed to be of a more temperate situation.

But as was said before, the Ancients knew not much of this Country, and therefore spoke upon conjecture, or more doubtful hear-say. For though Hanno a noble Carthaginian employed by that State, discovered much of the Western Shores of this great Peninsula, yet he ventured not much into the Land: nor did his Journal (either suppressed by the Romans, or not much took notice of) give any great light to other Nations to pursue those Voyages; being writ in the Carthaginian Tongue, but since translated into Greek, and published at Basil by Sigismund Gelenius, Anno 1533. As little credit did it find in former times, that some Phœnicians in the days of Pharao Neco, passing down the Red Sea, should sail about the Coasts of Africk to the Straits of Gibraltar; and to return again to Egypt by the Mediterranean; as we find in Herodotus, that they did. But what those Ages disbelieved or esteemed impossible, is now grown ordinary: the Circumnavigations about this Country being very frequent, since first performed by Vasques de Gama, an adventurous Portugal, in the year 1497. being 80 years after, or thereabouts, from the time that the Portugals first attempted the discovery and circumnavigation of the Coasts of Africk, which at the last, to the no small glory of their Nation, was accomplished by them. For so it happened that having extended their Dominions as far as they could upon the Continent of Spain; and having withal a large Sea-coast, and fit for shipping, they turned their Forces on the Moors, which dwelled in Africk, from whom they took many of their best Towns which lay along upon the shores of the main Atlantick. Encouraged by this good success, Henry Duke of Visce, one of the younger Sons of King John the first, resolved to spend his purse and credit upon new discoveries. And to that purpose, having had some conference with some persons of knowledge and experience in Cosmographie, he draweth together the best men of Action, both in Spain and Italy. By their means and his own good fortune he first discovers the Isle of Madera, An. 1420. The Isle of Holy Port, Anno 1428. The Islands of Cape Verd, Anno 1440. the Maritime parts of the Land of Guinea, Anno 1452. which fair foundations being laid, and the way opened to those great discoveries, which after followed; that glorious Prince deceased in a good old Age, Anno 1463. leaving this this Character behind him, that he was the first that made the Portugals in love with the Sea; discontinued after his decease above 20 years, it was resumed again by King John, the second of that name, who by the conduct of Diego Con, Anno 1486. discovered the Realms of Angola, and Congo, with the Isle of St. George; and thereupon resolves in the next year following to try his fortunes for compassing the whole Coasts of Africk, thereby to find a way to the wealth of India, in which he employed Captain Bartholomew Diaz, who passing beyond Cape Verd, discovered first the Princes Island, and sailing from thence Southward to the furthest Promontory (since called the Cape of Good Hope) returned home again; either discouraged by cross winds, or unruly Seas, or the untractableness of his Mariners, or by all together. The man to whom the honour of this enterprise was reserved, was that Vasques de Gama above mentioned, employed in this service by King Emanuel, Anno 1497. who having in his way, discovered the Islands of St. James, and St. Hellen, and after doubled that terrible Cape, which Bartholomew de Diaz durst not pass, gave it the name of Cabodi Buena esperanza, or the Cape of good Hope, because of the good hope it gave him of finding the desired way to the trade of India; and having so doubled this Cape, and got Africk on the left hand of him, he kept his course on towards the North, till he discovered the Countries of Quiloa, Mofambique, Mombaza, and Melinde, with the King of which last he contracted an especial friendship, and by his favours and directions, found the Port of Calicut in East-India, from whence with infinite joy and honour, he returned to Lisbone, Anno 1500. The design followed the next year by Alvares Capralde, furnished with 12 ships and 1500 Souldiers; but he being cast upon the Coasts of Brasil, and diverting wholly in a manner, on the discovery of that large Country, it was pursued the next year with greater strength, by Vasques and his brother Stephen, afterwards by Ferdinand de Olmeda; and Alphonso de Albuquerque, and divers others of that Nation, and finally by the Englisb, Hollanders, Merchants almost of every Country which have any Trade upon the Ocean. By means whereof the later Ages are better instructed in the particulars of it, than the former were; who knew not much beyond the limits of the Roman Empire, and some parts adjoining upon Egypt, more than the strange beasts, and more strange reports which they had from hence; occasioning hereby the By-word, Africa semper aliquid apportat novi.

Touching the State of Christianity in this great Continent, it is very weak; most of those Regions which Christian Religion had once gained from Idolatry, Mahometanism having since regained from Christianity: inasmuch that not only the North part of Africk near the Mediterranean, from Spain to Egypt, where the Gospel once so exceedingly flourished, that three hundred Catholick Bishops were at one time banished thence by Genfericus King of the Vandals, is at this present utterly void of Christians; (except some few Towns belonging to the King of Spain:) but even in all this vast Country, thrice as big as Europe, there is not any one Region entirely Christian, but the Kingdom of Habassia only, and perhaps not that; none where the Christians are intermingled with Mahometans, but only Egypt; nor where mingled with Idolaters, but in Congo and Angola, and some few Towns upon those Coasts in the hands of the Portugals. So little benefit have those Nations gotten by our late Discoveries; it being Gain, not Godliness, which the Merchant aims at.

The Nations inhabiting this Country, or dispersed in it, may be reduced to Africans properly so called, Egyptians, Habassians, Arabians, Jews, and some European Christians: the European Christians only in their Forts and Garrisons; the Jews in all the good Towns, where Trade is stirring; the Arabians chiefly on the Sea-coasts bordering on the Red-Sea; but wandering in great hordes or companies all about the Country with their wives and children: the Habassians and Egyptians, in their several Kingdoms: The Africans again subdivided into Moors and Cafers; of which the Moors are wholly under the Law of Mahomet, the Cafers dwelling in the in-land and more Southern parts, not discovered anciently, in their wonted Genilism. Accordingly, the Languages herein spoken are different also; The Portugal or Spanish being used by the Europeans; 2 The Chaldee or Syriack by the Jews; 3 The Arabic, by those of that Nation, and in all Barbary except Morocco only; 4 The Habassian, and 5 The Egyptian, in those Kingdoms: 6 That called Aquel-amarig, or the Noble language, supposed to be the natural and original language of the Roman Africans, intermixt with some Arabian words, and spoken generally in Morocco, and so amongst some of the Inhabitants of Barbary, nearest to Mount Atlas: 7 That named Sungai, used in Tombutum, Guinea, and others of the people of the Land of Negroes; and 8 That called Gubeo, spoke by those of Ethiopia inferior, and such of the Land of Negroes as lie next unto it.

In reference to the State of the Roman Empire, it contained only the Dioceses of Egypt, Africk, and part of the Diocese of Spain. The Diocese of Egypt subdivided into the Provinces of, 1 Lybia superior, 2 Lybia inferior, 3 Thebais, 4 Angustanica, 5 Arcadia, and 6 Egyptus, especially so called; distinguished by other names in the Nicene Council: That of Africk, into Tripolitana, 2 Byzacena, 3 Zeugitana, 4 Numidia, 5 Mauritania Casariensis, 6 and Mauritania Sitifensis; the other part of Mauritania, called Tingitana, being laid to the Diocese of Spain. The rest of this Peninsula, as they never conquered, so it never was much taken into consideration. But being more perfectly discovered now than in former times, (though not so perfectly as that I can be able to promise an exact account of it) it is divided commonly into these seven parts; 1 Egypt, 2 Barbary, or the Roman Africk, 3 Numidia, 4 Lybia, neither of which the same with those of the ancient Romans; 5 Terra Nigritarum, 6 Ethiopia superior, and 7 Ethiopia inferior. Such of the Islands as do not properly belong unto any of these, shall make up the eighth. In the Descriptions whereof we will follow the Method of Planiatrem, and begin with Egypt, as being peopled and possessed before all the residue.

EGYPT is bounded on the East with Idumæa, and the Bay of Arabia; on the West with Barbary, Numidia, and part of Lybia; on the North, with the Mediterranean Sea; on the South with Ethiopia Superior, or the Abyssine Empire.

This Country in the holy Scriptures is called Misraim, from Misraim the son of Cham, and Grandson of Ham, by whom first planted after the Flood, the Foot-Steps of which name do remain amongst the Arabians, who still call it Misre. Named in the same regard in the Book of Psalms, the Land of Ham: a name retained in some of the sacred Offices of the old Egyptians, where (as Plutarch witnesseth) it was called Chemia, for Chemia no doubt; as that from Cham or Ham, the first stock of their Nation. In prophane Authors it hath had the several names of 1 Aeria, from the serenity of the Air, which is never clouded; 2 Psamia, from the propinquity of the Sea, washing two sides of it; 3 Ogygia, from Ogyges a supposed King thereof; 4 Melampodius, from the black colour of the soil; 5 Ostia, from their God Ostus, here in high esteem; 6 and finally it was called Egyptus, which in the end prevailed over all the rest, either from Egyptus the brother of Panamus once King hereof, (in the stories of this Nation better known by the name of Ramefis;) or from Egyptus the old name of the River Nilus, by whose annual over-flowings made both rich and famous; and of the soil and rubbish which that River brought with it from the higher Countries, it was by some supposed to have been raised into firm land, and gained out of the Sea. Called therefore in some Writers by the name of Nili donum, or the gift of Nilus. Yet some there be who would have it called Egyptus for Aiguphtus, and that derived from Ai and Coptus, which signifieth the Land or Country of Coptus; that being supposed to have been anciently the chief City of it. And some again will have the name derived from Chioth, by which the Egyptians call themselves to this very day.

It containeth in length from the Mediterranean to the City of Asna, or Syene, bordering on Ethiopia, 562 Italian miles: in breadth (exclusively of Cyrene and Lybia) from Rosetta unto Damietta, or from the most Westerly branch of Nilus to the farthest East, 160 of the same miles; to which adding of those two Provinces makes a great accession: Situate under the second and fifth Climates, so that the longest day in Summer is but 13 hours and an half.

By reason of this Southernly situation of it, the Air is here very hot and offensive; so that to avoid the insupportable heats thereof, and to have the benefit of some fresh wind, the Inhabitants are accustomed to build high Towers in all their Towns, on which they use to solace and refresh themselves. The soil made fruitful by the over-flowings of Nilus, (whereof more anon) is so exceeding plentiful of all sorts of Grain, that it was called Horreum populi Romani, the Granary or Store-houfe of the People of Rome: which City it did annually furnish with four months provision; inasmuch that it was said by Pliny, that the greatness of the Roman Empire could not long continue without the Corn and wealth of Egypt, the plenty or famine of that City depending wholly on this Country. It abounds also with rich Pastures, in which they feed great store of Camels, Horses, Asses, Oxen, Sheep, and Goats; greater of growth than usually in most places else; and by reason of the moorishness of the Country, they have great store of Fowls. Of Poultry they have also good numbers about their houses, hatched in a different manner from all other Countries, not by the sitting of the Hen, but the heat of Furnaces, or Ovens; in which their eggs are orderly laid in dung, and by a gentle heat brought to animation. It is also liberally furnished with great plenty of Metals, some precious Stones, good Wines, and the choicest Fruits, as Lemons, Oranges, Pomgranates, Citrons, Figs, Cherries, and such as these, excellent both for taste and colour. Of Palm-trees also great abundance; of which though we have spoke before, yet we shall here more fully declare the nature and strange properties of them. They grow in couples, Male and Female, both thrust forth Cods full of seed, but the Female is only fruitful, and that not except growing by the Male, and having his seeds mixt with hers. The pith of these Trees is an excellent Salad, better than an Hartichoke, which in taste it very much resembleth. Of the branches they make Bedsteads, Latices, &c. of the leaves, Baskets, Mats, Fans, &c. of the outward husk of the Cod, Cordage; of the inner, Brushes. The fruit it bears, best known by the name of Dates, are in taste like Figs: and finally, it is said to yield whatsoever is necessary to the life of Man. It is the nature of this Tree, though never so ponderous a weight were put upon it, not to yield to the burden; but still to resist the heaviness of it, and to endeavour to lift and raise it self the more upwards. For this cause planted in Church-yards in the Eastern Countries, as an Emblem of the Resurrection: in stead whereof we use the Ewe-tree in these cold Regions. For the same reason, given to Conquerours as a token of Victory; it being the Emblem or Hieroglyphick of a Soldier's life. Hence figuratively used for precedence, as, Huic equidem consilio palmam do, in Terence; sometimes for the victory it self, as Non auferent tamen hanc palmam, in Pliny; & plurimarum palmarum homo, for a man that had won many prizes in the Fence-School, as in Tully, pro Roscio: more naturally for the sign of Victory, as in that of Horace,

Palmaque nobilis
Terrarum Dominos evehit ad Deos.

That is to say,

The Palm, of Victory a sign,
Equals men to the Powers Divine.

The

The People, though the Country lie in the same Climate with Barbary, are not black, but tawny, or Olive-coloured, affirmed by Pomponius Mela to weep and mourn over the bodies of their dead, dashed over with dung; to have held it a great impiety to burn or bury them, but having embalmed them, to lay them in some inward Room of their Houses: the men to keep themselves at home, for the household business, the women to follow Merchandise and affairs abroad; the men to carry burdens upon their heads, and the women theirs upon their shoulders: Antipodes in these last to most other Nations. But certainly they were a witty and ingenious people, the first Inventors of Geometry, Arithmetic, Physick, as also of Astrology, Necromancy, and Sorcery. They first taught the use of Letters to the neighbouring Phœnicians; by them imparted to the Greeks. Accustomed at the first to express their concepts in the shape of Birds, Beasts, Trees, &c. which they termed Hieroglyphicks; of which two or three examples out of Orus will not be impertinent. For Eternity they painted the Sun and Moon, as things which they believed to have had no beginning, nor were likely to have any end: for a Year, they painted a Snake, with his tail in his mouth, to shew how one year succeeding another, kept the world still in an endless circle. For a Month, they painted a Palm-tree, because at every new Moon, it sendeth forth a new branch. For God, they painted a Falcon; as well for that he soareth so high, as that he governeth the lesser Birds. For Integrity of life, they painted fire and water, both because these Elements are in themselves most pure, and because all other things are purified by them. For any thing that was Admiration to the Gods, they painted a Fish, because in their Sacrifices the Priests never used them; and the like. From this manner of expressing ones self, the invention of Letters is thought to have had its original (though learnt by them no question of the children of Israel, when they lived amongst them;) the History whereof, take briefly and word for word, out of Tartius. Primi per formam animalium Egyptii, &c. The Egyptians first of all expressed the conceptions of the mind, by the shapes of Beasts; and the most ancient Monuments of mans memory, are seen graven in stones; and they say, that they are the first inventors of Letters. Thence the Phœnicians, because they were strong at Sea, brought them into Greece; and so they had the glory of that, which they received from others: For there goeth a report, that Cadmus sailing thither in a Phœnician Ship, was the Inventor of that Art amongst the Greeks, when they were yet unexperienced and rude. Some report that Cecrops the Athenian, or Livius the Theban, and Palamedes the Græcian, did find out sixteen Characters at the time of the Trojan War; and that afterwards Simonides added the rest. But in Italy the Etrurians learned them of Demaratus the Cuthinian; and the Alorigines of Evander the Arcadian. So far Tartius. That the Phœnicians were the first Inventors of Letters, I dare not affirm; and as backward am I to refer the glory hereof to the Egyptians; for certainly the Hebrews were hereinskilled before either: yet that the Phœnicians were herein School-master to the Greeks, I think I may with safety maintain, having Lucan in consent with Tartius.

Phœnices primi (famâ si creditur) ausi
Mansurum rudibus vocem signare figuris.

Phœnicians first (if fame may credit have)
Durd in rude Characters our words engrave.

Of this mind also is Isidore of Sevil in the first book of Originations, who also addeth, that for that cause the Fronts of Books, and the Titles of Chapters were written in Red letters, as it is by some still in use. Hinc est quod & Phœniceo colore librorum capita describantur, quia ab ipsis litera initium habuerunt, cap. 3. As for these less vulgar Letters, which the Latines call Cyphra, and whereof every exercised Statesman hath peculiar to himself; they were first invented by Julius Cæsar, when he first began to think of the Roman Monarchy: and were used by him in his Letters to his more private and tried friends, that if by misfortune they should be intercepted, the contents of them should not be understood; Idem & apud istos monitis & cyphra, ne olvis litterarum lesio cuius esset. Augustus one of the greatest Politicians of the World, had another kind of obscure writing; for in his Letters of more secrecy and importance, he always used τὸ συντομὴν καὶ συντομὴν, to put the Letter immediately following in the order of the Alphabet, for that which in ordinary Writing he should have used. As for Brachygraphy, or the Art of Writing by short Characters, so useful for the taking of a Speech or Sermon as it is spoken: I find in Dion, that Mæcenus that great favourite of Augustus Cæsar, and favourite of Learning, did first invent them, ad celeritatem scribendi, for the speedier dispatch of writing; καὶ τὸ πρὸς ἡμετέραν συντομὴν (they are the very words of my Author) καὶ τὸ πρὸς ἡμετέραν. Isidor in the second Chapter of his book above mentioned, ascribeth it to Aquila, the Liberius or Freed man of his Mæcenus; and to Tertius Persannius, and Philargius, who added to this invention. Yet had all they their chief light in it from Tullius Tiro, a Freed man of Cicero's; who had undertaken and compassed it in the Prepositions, but went no further. At the last it was perfected by Seneca, who brought this Art into order and method; the whole volume of his contractions consisting of 5000 words. Deinde Seneca contraxit omnium, digestos, & aucto numero, opus esset in quinque millia.

So eminent in Arts and Learning were the old Egyptians, that from them Pythagoras and Democritus learnt their Philosophy; Lycurgus, Solon, and Plato, their Forms of Government; Orpheus and Homer their Poetical fictions of the Gods. Particularly here flourished Aristarchus the famous and learned Grammarian; 2 Herodiana a diligent Student and searcher into curious Arts; 3 Ammonius, the master of Plotinus; 4 Didymus surnamed Chalcenterus, for his indefatigable Industry in several Sciences; 5 Marathon, an old Historian, of whom we have nothing but some fragments; 6 Appianus, an Historian of a later date, whose works are extant; 7 Didymus the Grammarian; 8 Cl. Ptolemaeus the Geographer;

9 Achilles Statius the Poet; 10 And before all the profound Philosopher Mercurius, surnamed Trismegistus. And after their conversion to the Faith of Christ, 1 Pantenus, the first Reader of Divinity, in the Schools of Alexandria; 2 Origen, and 3 Clement Alexandrinus, both skilled in the Universality of Learning; 4 Dionysius; 5 Atanasius, and 6 Cyril; all three Bishops of Alexandria, and the glories of their several times.

This notwithstanding their Religion before the embracing of Christianity was the worst of Gentilism; these people not only worshipping the Sun, Moon, and the Stars of Heaven, creatures of greatest use and glory; nor only sacrificing to Jupiter, Hercules, Apollus, and the rest of the Gods, (many of whom were Authors in their several times of some publicke benefit to mankind) as did other Gentiles; but attributing Divine honours to Crocodiles, Snakes, Serpents, Garlick, Leeks and Onions. For which, as worthily condemned by the Christian Fathers; so most deservedly exposed unto publick scorn, by the pens of the Poets;

Porrum & cape nefas violare, & ledere morsu;
Felices populi, quibus hæc nascuntur in Hortis
Numina! — Quis nescit qualia demens
Egyptus portenta colat; &c.

Which may be rendered to this purpose;

To bite an Onion or a Leek, is more Than deadly Sin. The Numen they adore
Growes in their Gardens. And who doth not know What monstrous Shapes for Gods in Egypt go?

But the God most esteemed by them, and by all sorts of the Egyptians the most adored, was Apis, a coal-black Oxe, with a white star in his forehead, the Effigies of an Eagle on his back, and two hairs only in his tail. But it seemeth his Godship, was not so much respected by strangers. For Cambyses when he conquered Egypt, ran him with his Sword thorow the Thigh, and caused all his Priests to be scourged: And Augustus being here, would not vouchsafe to see him, saying, Θεὸς ἂν ἢ βῆς ἀγορεύουσιν ἡ ὁδὸς, that the Gods and not the Oxen of Egypt were the object of his devotions. A speech most truly worthy for brave an Emperour.

But it is time we should proceed to a Survey of these Egyptians, as they stand at the present, much differing from the Ingenuity, and Abilities, of their Predecessors; nothing but Ignorance and Barbarisme to be found amongst them. For such as have observed the nature of the Modern Egyptians, ascribe them to have much degenerated from the worth of their Ancestors; prone to Innovations, devoted to Luxury, Cowardly, Cruel, addicted naturally to cavil, and to detract from whatsoever is good, and eminent. In their dealing with other men, more observant then faithful, of a wit much inclining to Craftiness, and very eager on their profit. Of person, of a mean stature, Tawny of complexion, and spare of Body, but active and quick of foot. Such as inhabit in the Cities, apply themselves to Merchandize, grow rich by Trading, reasonably well habited, and not much differing from the Turks in their drefs and Fashion. Those in the Country, who betake themselves to Husbandry, affirmed to be a savage and nasty people, crufted over with dirt, and stinking of smোক; fit company for none but those of their own condition. Nothing now left amongst them of the Arts of their Ancestors, but an affectation which they have unto Divinations; to Fortune-telling great pretenders; by which, and some cheating-tricks in which very well practised, great numbers of them wander from one place to another, and so get their livelyhood; occasioning the Vagabonds and straglers of other Nations, who pretend unto the same false Arts, to assume their names. The whole body of the Inhabitants now an Hochpot or Medley of many Nations, Moors, Arabians, Turks, the natural Egyptian making up the least part of the reckoning.

The Women of the same complexion with the men, but well formed and featured, did they not too much affect a seeming Copulency; which if they cannot get in flesh, they will have in cloaths. Very fruitful in child-bearing, and quick of dispatch when they are in labour: some of them having three or four children at a Birth; those that are born in the eighth month living to good Age, and not in danger of death, as in other Countries. Such of them as dwell in Cities, cover their faces with black Cypres bespotted with red; their armes, and ancles garnished with bracelets and hoops of Gold, Silver, or some other Metal. Those in the Country, for a veil, use some dirty clout, having holes only for their eyes, which little is too much to see and abstain from loathing. Both in the City and the Country, contrary to the custome in all places else, the women use to make water standing, and the men couring on their knees.

The Christian Faith was first here planted by S. Mark, whom all Antiquity maketh the first Bishop of Alexandria. His successors, till the time of Heraclius and Dionysius, chosen continually out of the Priestery or Cathedral-Clergy; afterwards out of the Clergy at large. Their Jurisdiction settled by a Canon of the Council of Nice, over all the Churches in the whole Diocess of Egypt, (taking the word Diocess in the Civil notion) containing Lybia, Pentapolis and Egypt specially so called: to which, though Epiphanius adds Thebais, Maroticus, and Ammoniacus, yet he adds nothing in effect; Thebais, and Maroticus being parts of Egypt, as Ammoniacus was of Lybia. Afterwards the Ethiopian or Abassine Churches became subject to this Patriarch also, and do acknowledge to this day some relation to to him. By the coming in of the Saracens, and the subjugation of this Country, Christianity fell here into great decay; languishing so sensibly since those times, especially since the conquest of it by the Turks; that whereas Brocardus in his time reckoned three hundred thousand Christians; in the last estimate which was made of them, they were found to be but fifty thousand. This small remainder of them, commonly called Coptis, either from the Greek word κόπτα, Scindo, because they retained the use of Circumcision with their Christianity; or from Coptus a chief Town in Egypt, in which many of them did reside; or finally by Abbreviation from Egyptis, corrupted from Egypti, their own National name. They are all Jacobites in Sect, from whom they differ notwithstanding in some particulars, in some from all Christian Churches, in many from the Church of Rome. The points most proper to them, 1 Using Circumcision with their Baptisme, but rather as a National than Religious custome; though in that sense also laid aside, as is said by some, by the persuation of some Legates from the Pope of Rome, in a Synod held in Caire, An. 1583. 2ly. Conferring all sacred Orders under the Priesthood, on Infants immediately after Baptism; their Parents, till they come to sixteen years of age, performing what they promised in their behalf, viz. Chastity, fasting on Wednesday and Friday, and the four Lent of the year. 3ly. Reputing Baptism not to be of any efficacy, except ministered by the Priest, in the open Church, in what extremity soever. 4ly. And yet not baptizing any Children till the fortieth day, though they die in the interim. 5ly. Giving to Infants the Sacrament of the Eucharist, as soon as Christened; 6 Contracting Marriages even in the second Degree of Consanguinity, without dispensation; 7 Observing not the Lords day, nor any of the Festivals, except only in Cities; 8ly. And in their Liturgies, reading the Gospel written by Nicodemus. The points wherein they differ from the Church of Rome, 1 Administ'ring the Sacrament of the Lords Supper under both kinds; 2ly. Administ'ring in leavened bread; 3ly. Admitting neither Extreme unction, nor the use of the Eucharist, to those that are sick; 4ly. Nor Purgatory, nor Prayer for the dead, 5ly. Not using Elevation in the Act of administ'ring; And 6. Reckoning the Roman Church for Heretical, and esteeming no better of the Lutins, then they do of the Jewes. In these opinions they continue hitherto against all Opponents and persuasions. For though Baronius in the end of the sixth Tome of his Annals, hath registred an Ambassage from Marcus, the then Patriarch of Alexandria, to Pope Clement the 8; wherein he is said to have submitted himself and the Churches of Egypt to the Pope of Rome; yet upon further search made, it was found but a Cheat, devised to hold up the reputation of a sinking cause. The Patriarch of Alexandria still adhereth to his own Authority; though many of late, by the practice and Solicitation of some bulie Friars, have been drawn to be of the Religion of the Church of Rome, and to use her Liturgies.

Among the Rarities of this Country, some were the works of Nature, and some of industry and magnificence. Of this last kind I reckon the Labyrinth, the Pyramids, and the Pharos; all of them admirable in their several kinds, the envy of the Ages past, and the astonishment of the present. Look we first on the Pyramids, many in number, three most celebrated, and one the principal of all; situate on the South of the City of Memphis, and on the Western banks of Nilus. This last, the chief of the Worlds seven Wonders, square at the bottome, is supposed to take up eight Acres of ground. Every square 300 single Paces in length, ascended by 255 steps, each step above three Foot high, and a breadth proportionable; growing by degrees narrower and narrower till we come to the top, and at the top consisting but of three Stones only, yet large enough for 60 men to stand upon. No Stone so little in the whole as to be drawn by any of our Carriages, yet brought thither from the Arabian Mountains. How brought, and by what Engine mounted, is an equal wonder. Built for the Sepulchre of Cheops, an Egyptian King (as were the rest for others of those mighty Princes) who employed in it day by day twenty years together, no fewer than 366000 men continually working on it. The charges which they put him to, in no other food than G. slick, Radishes, and Onions, being computed at a thousand and eight hundred Talents. The next to this in bulk and beauty, is said to be the worke of a Daughter of Cheops, enabled (as Hersdorns writeth) both to finish her Fathers undertaking, and raise her own unto the height, by the prostitution of her body, requiring but one stone towards the Work from each one of her Customers; but the Tale unlikely. Nor is it of a greater Truth, though affirmed by Josephus, and supposed by many good Divines, that the drudgery put upon the Israelites did concern these Pyramids; the Materials of these works being Stone; their employment, Brick. But past all doubt, advanced by those considerate Princes upon good advice, and not for ostentation only of their power and glories. For by this means they did not only eternize their memory to succeeding Ages, but for the present kept the Subject from sloth and Idleness; who being a people prone unto Innovations, were otherwise like enough to have fed that sin in the change of Government, if not thus prudently diverted.

As for the Labyrinth, it was built by Psammiticus on the banks of the River Nilus, situate on the South of the Pyramids, and North of Arsinoe, or the City of Crocodiles. It contained within the compass of one continued Wall a thousand Houses, and twelve Royal Palaces, all covered with Marble; and had only one entrance; but innumerable turnings, and returnings, sometimes one over another; and all in a manner, invions to such as were not acquainted with them: the building more under ground, then above; the Marble stones laid with such Art, that neither Wood, nor Cement was employed in any part of the Fabrick; the Chambers so disposed, that the dores upon their opening, did give a report no less terrible then a crack of Thunder. The maine entrance all of white Marble, adorned with stately Columns, and most curious Imagery. The end at length being attained, a pair of Staires of 90 Steps conducted into a gallant Portico, supported with Pillars of Theban stone, which was the entrance into a fair and spacious Hall, (the place of their general Conventions) all of polished Marble, set out with the Statues of their Gods. A work which afterwards was imitated by Darius, in the Cretan Labyrinth; though though that fell as short of the glories of this, as Minos was inferior unto Pseumiticus, in Power and Riches.

Next unto these, I place the Isle and Tower of Pharos, the Island opposite unto Alexandria, once a mile distant from the Land, but joyned to the Continent by Cleopatra, on this occasion. The Rhodians, then Lords of the Sea, used to exact some Tribute or acknowledgment out of every Island within those Seas, and consequently out of this. Their Ambassadors sent unto Cleopatra to demand this Tribute, she detained with her seven dayes, under colour of celebrating some solemn Festivals; and in the mean time, by making huge dams and banks in the Sea, with incredible both charge and speed, united the Island to the shore; which finished, she sent the Rhodians away empty handed, with this witty jeer, telling them that they were to take Toll of the Islands, and not of the Continent. A work of great rarity and magnificence, and that incredible speed, wherewith it was finished. As for the Watch-Tower, called in Greek and Latine Pharos, by the name of the Island; it was built by Ptolomy Philadelphus, for the benefit of Sailers, (the Seas upon that coast being very unsafe and full of Flats) to guide them over the Bar of Alexandria. Deservedly esteemed another of the Worlds seven Wonders: the other five being 1 the Mausoleum, 2 the Temple of Ephesus, 3 the Walls of Babylon, 4 the Colossus of Rhodes, and 5 the Statue of Jupiter Olympius. This Watch-tower, or Pharos, was of wonderful height, ascended by degrees, and having many Lanthorns at the top, wherein lights burned nightly, as a direction to such as sailed by Sea. The Materials were white Marble; the chief Architect, Sostratus of Gnidus, who ingraved on the work this Inscription. Sostratus of Gnidus, the Son of Dexiphanes, to the Gods protectors, for the safeguard of Sailers. This Inscription he covered with Plaster, and thereon ingraved the name and title of the King, the Founder: to the end that the Kings name being soon wasted and washed away, his own, which was written in Marble, might be eternized to posterity, as the Founder of it. Nigh unto this Pharos, Cesar pursuing Pompey into Egypt, and having discontented the King thereof, by demanding pay for his Souldiers, had his Navy which here lay at Anchor assaulted by Achilles, one of young Ptolomies servants, Cesar himself being then in Alexandria. Hearing of the skirmish he halted to the Pharos, meaning to succour his Navy in person: but the Egyptians making towards him on all sides, he was compelled to leap into the Sea, and swim for his life. And though (to avoid their Darts) he sometimes ducked, yet held he still his left hand above the water, and in it divers Books, which he carried safe unto his Ships, and animating his men, got the victory. It is said that Egypt hath only two doors; the one by land, which is the strong Town of Peleusium, or Damiata; the other by water, which is this Pharos: Tota Egyptus maritimo accessu, Pharo; pedestre vero, Pelusius, velut claustris munita existimatur, saith Oppian.

Amongst the Rarities of Nature, we may reckon those strange Beasts and Fishes, proper almost unto this Country, i. e. the Crocodile, the Ichnemnon, the Hippopotamus (or Sea-horse) the Iliu, the Aspe, and many several sorts of Serpents. To speak of which particularly were a work more proper to a Natural History, then a Geographical. And yet the Crocodile, more proper unto Egypt then all the rest, cannot be parted within silence; A creature of a strange nature, hatched of an Egg no bigger then that of a Turkie, and yet increasing to the length of thirty foot; his tail as long as all the rest of his body, with which he is accustomed to inchain his prey, and draw it into the River; his feet armed with claws, and his back with impenetrable Scales; his mouth so wide (of which he moveth only the upper Jaw) that he is able to swallow a whole Heifer; equally used to both Elements, but better lighted in the water, then on the land; Cowardly, though a Creature of prey, and such as usually flies from those which dare set upon him; and easily vanquished by the Dolphin, who swimming under the water woundeth him in the belly, where assailable only. Whether so easily destroyed by the Ichnemnon (a kind of Water-Rat) skipping into his mouth, and gnawing his way out again, as old Writers say, hath of late been questioned.

Of less dispute, but not less rarity in nature, are these that follow. 1 That in all this Country it never raineth; or if a Cloud do sometimes happen to dissolve upon them, it bringeth on their bodies innumerable Sores, and strange diseases. 2 The annual overflowing of the River Nilus, and the many memorable things which are said to follow on the same. Of which it is thus said by Lucan:

*Terra suis contenta bonis, non indiga Mercis,
Aut Jovis; in solo tanta est fiducia Nilo:*

*The earth content with its own wealth, doth crave
No Foreign Mart, nor Jove himself; they have Their hopes alone in Nilus fruitful Wave.*

This Nilus from the 15 day of June, swelleth above his Banks, for the space of 40 dayes; and in as many more, gathereth his waters again to their proper bounds. If it flow not to the height of fifteen Cubits, then the earth is deficient in her abundance of increase, for want of moisture; and if the waters surmounted the superficies of the Earth, more than seventeen Cubits; then like a drunken man, it cannot produce its natural operation, as having its stomach (as it were) over-laid, and surcharged with too much liquor; but if the mean be granted, there is no Country which can brag of the like Fertility; the Corn being all housed before the 20th. of May. During this Inundation, they keep their Beasts and Cattel on the tops of such little hills, which either the providence of nature, or the Industry of man hath prepared for them; where they abide till the decrease of the Waters: and on these Hills also stand the most of their Towns and Villages, appearing in the time of the Flood, like so many Islands; and holding a commerce and continual traffick by the entercourse of Boats and Shallops, by which they do transport their Marketable commodities from one place to another. And if it chance at any time, that the River doth not

not thus over-flow the Country, it is not only the Fore-runner to a following dearth, but prognosticeth some ensuing mischief to the Prince and State: Confirmed by the testimony of good and creditable Authors, who have told us that in the 10th. and 11th. years of Cleopatra, the River increased not at all: and that it was noted as a Fore-teller of the Fall of those two great, but unfortunate Princes, Cleopatra and her Sweetheart Antonius. A second commodity which ariseth from the overflowings of Nilus, is the health which it bringeth with it in most parts of the Country; the Plague which often-times miserably rageth, upon the first day of the flood, abating instantly: insomuch that whereas 500. may die of that disease in the City of Caire but the day before, there dieth not one of it on the day following. A third wonder in this River, is, that keeping its waters united in a body together, after it falleth into the Sea, it changeth the colour of the Mediterranean, further then any part of it can be seen from the shore. Add unto these the many living creatures which the slime thereof engendereth, on the withdrawing of the River to its natural Channel: whereof Ovid thus,

Plurima Cultores veris Animalia glebis Inveniunt.*

Which I English thus;

*So when the Seven-mouth'd Nile the fields forsakes,
And to his ancient Channel him betakes;
The Plough-men many living Creatures find,
By turning up the mud that's left behind.*

Amongst which Creatures so ingendered, are said to be such innumerable heaps of Frogs, that if Nature, or Divine Providence rather, did not furnish this Country with a proportionable number of Storks, by whom they are greedily devoured, the Plague of Frogs would come a second time upon them, to their utter destruction.

On the Banks of this River also grew those sedge Weeds called Papyrus, of which Paper was made in former times, which I reckon amongst the Rarities of Egypt also, but a Rarity of Art and Nature mixed. They divided it into thin flakes, (into which it naturally parteth) then laying them on a Table, and moistning them with the glutinous waters of the River, they pressed them together, and after dried them in the Sun, by means of which invention, books being easier to be transcribed and reserved then formerly, Ptolomy Philadelphus made his excellent Library at Alexandria: and understanding how Attalus King of Pergamus, by the benefit of this Egyptian Paper, strived to exceed him in that kind of magnificence, prohibited the carrying of it out of Egypt. Hereupon Attalus invented the use of Parchments, made of the skins of Calves and Sheep; from the materials called Membranae, and Pergamenta from the place where they were invented. The convenience whereof was the cause, that in short time the Egyptian Paper was worn out of use; in place whereof succeeded our Paper made of Rags; the Authors of which excellent invention, our Progenitors have forgotten to commit to memory. Before the use of these Papers and Parchments were first made known, I observe three ways of writing amongst the Ancients, (I hope I shall be pardoned this short digression.) 1 On the inward side of the Bark of a Tree, which is in Latine called Liber; and whence Books have the name of Libri. 2ly. On Tables framed out of the main body of a Tree, which being called Caudex, gave the Latines occasion to call a Book Codex. 3ly. They used to cover their Tables over with Wax, and thereon to write what they had to signify; from whence a Letter-carrier was named Tabellarius. The instrument wherewith they wrote, was a sharp-pointed Iron, which they called Stylus; a word now signifying (the Original derived from hence) the peculiar kind of Phrase which any man useth: as, Negligens stylus, in Quintilian; and Exercitatus stylus, in Cicero. I should have also noted, that they used sometimes to write in Leaves; That the Sibyls Oracles being so written and scattered abroad, had the name of Sibylla Folia; and that from thence we have the phrase of a Leaf of Paper. But of this Argument enough.

Now to these Rarities of nature, and magnificent Industry, most of them neer the River Nile or relating to it, we are to add another of far greater moment, and such as plainly seemeth to be supernatural, which is, that about five miles from the City of Caire, there is a place, in which, on every Good Friday yearly, their appear the Heads, Leggs, and Armes of men, rising out of the ground, to a very great number: which if a man draw neer unto them, or touch any of them, will shrink again into the Earth. Supposed by some to be an Imposture of some Water Men only; who stick them overnight in the Sands, and keeping them secret to themselves, obtain thereby the ferrying over of many thousands of people, to behold the sight. But Stephen Duplet, a sober and discerning man, in the opinion of Egnartius, who reports it from him, conceived otherwise of it; affirming soberly that he was an Eye-witness of the wonder, that he had touched divers of these rising Members; and that (as he was once so doing to the head of a Child) a man of Caire cryed out unto him, Kali Kali ants materasde, that is to say, Hold, hold, you know not what you doe. A strange Forerunner (if it be of undoubted credit) of the Resurrection of the whole Body, presented yearly, in the Rising of these several parts.

Having thus done with the Rarities concerning Nilus, and that great increase of wealth which accrued thereby to all the Country, in the improvement of the natural Commodities of the Earth: let us next look on the Red Sea, and the great Riches which that brought unto this Kingdom, in the way of Trading. A Sea whereof we have spoken already, as to the reason of the name, the extent thereof, and the several

Islands

Islands contained in it, and therefore shall not need to repeat it here. That which is proper to this Country, and to this alone, is the fame it hath for the miraculous passage of the Israelites through it as upon dry-land, and the drowning of Pharaoh Cenchres and all his people, at large commemorated in the books of Holy Scriptures : as also for that through it the Spices of India, and Arabia, were brought to Alexandria ; and thence by the Venetians dispersed through all Europe, Africa, and Asia. I suppose I shall not do amiss to set down Historically out of Galiano, a relation of the beginning, continuance, and period of the Traffick through this Sea, by which all Europe formerly received its great Commodity. Know then (saith he) that Ptolomy Philadelphus, 277 years before the Incarnation, was the first that set on foot this Navigation : Colir (of old called Myos, Hormos) on the Sea-side being the ordinary Haven, out of which they hoysed Sail for India ; and into which they returned, full Fraught with their Commodities. From hence they were by Land conveyed to Coptus, and so down the Nile to Alexandria, by which Traffick the City grew exceeding Rich ; inasmuch that the Customs-house there yielded Procl. Auletis 7 Millions and an half of Gold yearly. The Romans being Lords of Egypt, enchaned the Customs to double that sum : they sent into India every year (as Pliny witnesseth) 120 Ships, whose lading was worth 1200000 Crowns ; and there was made in return of every Crown, 100. When the Vandals, Lombards, Goths, and Moors had torn in pieces the Roman Empire, all Commerce between Nations began to cease. At last perceiving the inconvenience, they began anew ; conveying the Indian Commodities, partly by Land, partly by Water, unto Caplia in Taurica Cherfoneus, belonging to the Genoese. Next Trabezond was made the Mart-town, then Sarmachand in Zagataie, where the Indians, Turkish, and Perlian Merchants meet to barter Wares : the Turks conveying their Merchandise to Damascus, Barutti, and Aleppo ; from whence the Venetians transported it to Venice, making that the common Emporium of Christendoms. Once again, viz. Anno 1300. the Soldans of Egypt restored the passage by the Red-Sea ; which having continued more then 200 years, is now discontinued by the Portugal, Spaniards, English, and Dutch, which bring them to their several homes by the back-side of Africk : So that not only the Traffick of Alexandria is almost decayed, and the Riches of the Venetians much diminished ; but the Drugs and Spices have lost much of their vertue, as impaired by too much moisture in so long a Voyage. So much faith he, touching the course and alteration of this Trading, to which I shall take leave to add, that for the better and more quick return of such Commodities as were usually brought into this Sea, some of the Kings of Egypt attempted formerly to cut a main Channel from it, to the River Nilus, passable by ships of great burden ; the marks of whose proud attempts are remaining still. Sesostris was the first who designed the work, having before with good success cut many Trenches from the River, and some Navigable, into many places of the Country ; by which unprofitable Marshes were drained, the Country strengthened, Trade made easie, and the people better furnished with water than in former times. Darius the great Persian Monarch, seconded the same Project ; so did one of the Ptolomies ; The like is said of a Capricious Portugal in these later times. But they all gave it over on the same consideration ; which was a fear, least by letting in the Red-Sea they might drown the Country, and perhaps make a second Deluge in the parts of Greece and Asia Minor which lay nearest to them : that Sea being found to be much higher than the Mediterranean, and the flats of Egypt.

But here we are to understand, that all which hitherto hath been spoken concerning Egypt, relates to Egypt strictly, and specially so called ; containing only so much of the Country of Egypt, as lieth upon the Banks and Channels of the River Nilus ; and not to all that tract of ground, which lay betwixt the Red-Sea, and the borders of Lybia, which was reckoned in the compas of the Kingdom of Egypt, much less as comprehending Lybia and Cyrene also, though now accounted Members of that great Body, and anciently parts, or Provinces of the Diocesis of it. For Egypt, in the largest sense and acception of the word, may be, and generally is divided into these three parts, viz. 1. Egypt, in the general Notion, or the Kingdom of Egypt, extended on the Mediterranean from the borders of Idumea to the Roman Lybia, or Marmarica, lying Westward of the mouth of Nilus, called Heracleoticum ; and on the borders of Ethiopia Superior, from the said Red-Sea, to the Country of Lybia Interior. 2. Lybia, or Marmarica, lying betwixt Egypt properly so called, and the Province of Cyrene, or Pentapolis. And 3. Cyrene, or Pentapolis, reaching from that Lybia, to the greater Syrtis ; where it bordered with that part of the African Diocesis, which is now called the Kingdom of Tunis. And in this first acception of it we shall now proceed to a Survey of the Mountains and chief Cities ; which done, we shall describe the other in their proper places ; and then unite them all in the General Story.

As for the Mountains of this Country, there are very many : there were no living else for the people in the time of the overflowings of the River. The principal of those, 1. Those called Montes Lybici, lying in a long chain on the West of Nilus ; 2. Abastrinus ; 3. Prophyrus ; 4. Troicus ; 5. Basilanus on the East thereof. Betwixt these Hills the course of the River is so hemmed in on both sides, that at the upper part of the stream, where it first entereth into Egypt, the space betwixt the Mountains, is not above four miles broad ; enlarging afterwards to eight, then about Caire to thirty seven ; then opening wider and wider, till we come to the breaches of the Delta, as the Country doth increase in breadth. On these and other of the Mountains and lesser Hills, stand most part of the Towns, the receptacles of the Country-people in the time of the Flood, rising when least, to fifteen Cubits, or seven yards and an half.

Rivers of note here are none but Nilus, nor indeed any one but that ; that being sufficient of it self to enrich this Country, which otherwise would be nothing but a Sandy Desert. The Head thereof not in the Mountains of the Moon, as was once supposed, but in the Lake Zemire in Ethiopia Interior ; passing from thence through the Higher Ethiopia, or Habassine Empire, till it falls at last into this Country ; and running in one continual Chanel (excepting where it brancheth into little Islands, as it sometimes doth) before its influx into the Sea, is divided into seven great streams, opening into the Sea with so many many mouths. Namely ; 1. Heracleoticum ; 2. Boluiticum ; 3. Schaniticum ; 4. Patinicum ; 5. Mendicum ; 6. Caniticum ; 7. Pelusiaticum. The first and last of these Currents, (which are the only two now left) being far distant from the others, and growing into one, at the first point of the Rivers division, make that part of Egypt which is called Delta, because to such as come to this Country out of Greece, Italy, or Asia, it seemeth that Letter in the Greek Alphabet. Now because Nilus runneth in its certain Channels, and that the people have no other water to make use of, for all necessities ; there are many bye-trenches and deep Ditches cut in convenient places, (by the care and magnificence of their Kings) to receive its Waters, and to communicate them to the people, who know almost no other drink than the Waters thereof, and indeed they need not ; the Waters of this River being of such excellent, both taste, and virtue, that when Pescennius Niger saw his Souldiers murmur for want of Wine ; What (said he) do you grumble for Wine, having the Waters of Nile to drink ?

But beside the Waters of this River, and the Trenches of it, the people are supplied with that Commodity by Lakes, and artificial Channels, which serve for watering their Cattle, tempering of Mortar for their buildings, and other such inferior uses ; sometimes perhaps for drink for the poorer sort, who cannot be conveniently furnished with the waters of Nile. Amongst the Trenches (which were many, as before was said) those of most estimation were the Works of Ptolomy, and the Emperour Trajan ; the first falling into that branch of the Nile, which maketh the Isle called Heracleotis ; the other into the main body of it, not far from Caire. These two, by reason of the many fresh Springs which fall into them, have the name of Rivers in old Authors : and betwixt these was seated the Land of Gessen, extending from Nilus to the Red Sea, on the East and West. The chief of note amongst the Lakes, were those called, 1. Marootis, not far from Alexandria, by Pliny called Arapotes, Maria by Ptolomy ; all which names are now lost, and changed into that of Lago di Antacon, from a Town of that name near unto it. 2. Laccus, supposed to be the same which in the book of Maccabees is called Asphar, lib. 1. cap. 9. And 3. Moris, now called Bucharia, more memorable then the rest. In compas 3500 furlongs, 50 fathoms deep, in the midst whereof were two Pyramids 50 fathoms above the water, and as much beneath it : the Fifth of this Lake, for one six months in the year, said to be worth twenty of their pounds a day to the Kings Exchequer ; for the other six, each day a Talent. 4. The Lakes called Amari, into which the Trench, or River called Ptolomeus, doth discharge its waters, conveyed from thence into the Red-Sea.

The whole divided anciently into two parts only. 1. That called Delta, betwixt the two extrem branches of the River Nilus, the form of which Letter it seemeth to him who standing on the Sea-shore could take a view of it, as before was said. 2. That called Thebais, from Thebe the principal City of it, comprehending all the rest of the course of that River, shut up on both sides with the Mountains spoken of before. But this Division leaving out all those parts hereof, which lay on the East-side towards the Arabian Golfs, and on the West, as far as to the borders of Lybia Marmarica : the Macedonians laying it all together, divided it into 18 Centreds, or Districts, by them called Nomi ; increased in the time of Ptolomy the Geographer, to 46. Ortelius out of divers Authors hath found 20 more. When conquered by the Romans, and made a Diocesis of the Empire, it was divided into four Provinces, (not reckoning Marmarica, and Cyrene into the account) that is to say, 1. Egyptus specially so called, containing all the Delta, and the District or Nomus of Maroutica, bordering on Marmarica. 2. Augustanica, so called from Augustus Caesar, on the East of the Delta, betwixt it and Arabia Petrea. 3. Arcadia, so called from the Emperour Arcadius, in whose time it was taken out of Thebais, lying on both sides of the River, from the Delta to the City of Antinous. 4. Thebais, extending on both sides of the River from the borders of Lybia Marmarica to the Red-Sea, (as the other doth) from Antinous, unto Ethiopia ; Divided otherwise by some, into Superiorem, reaching from Ethiopia to the City of Antinous ; Mediam, stretching thence to the point of the Delta ; and Inferiorem, which comprehendeth all the rest. But at this time, that part hereof, which lieth on the South and East of Caire, is called Sand, or Salid ; honoured heretofore with the dwelling of the ancient Pharaohs, because nearest unto Ethiopia their most puissant neighbour. 2. That betwixt Caire, Rosetta, and Alexandria, hath the name of Erris, wherein the Ptolomean Princes did most reside ; because most convenient for receiving supplies of men, from the States of Greece. And finally, that from Caire, to Tenefe and Damiata, is now called Marimna, in which the Turks and Mamluks made the seat of their Empire ; because more neighbouring to the Christians, whom they stood in fear of, as likeliest to invade them upon that side. In the whole Country there was reckoned in the time of Amasis the 24. no fewer than 20000 Cities ; but if the Towns and Villages be not reckoned in, I should much doubt of the account. By Diodorus Siculus it is said that there were 3000 in his time ; but Ortelius, on a diligent search, finds 300 only.

Those of most note in the Province of Augustanica, 1. Pelusium, the most Eastern City of Egypt towards Idumea, situate on the most Eastern Channel of Nilus, called hence Pelusiaticum ; by Ammianus said to be the work of Peleus the Father of Achilles, commanded by the Gods to purge himself in the Lake adjoining, for the murder of his brother Phocus. Accounted for the chief door of Egypt towards the Land, as Pharos was to those who came thither by Sea ; the Metropolis of the Province of Augustanica, the birth-place of Ptolomy the Geographer, and the Episcopal Sea of S. Isidore, surnamed Pelusiotes, whose eloquent and pious Epistles are still extant. Out of the ruins hereof (if not the same under another Title) arose, 2. Damiata, memorable for the often Sieges laid unto it by the Christian Armies ; for none more then that under John de Breanne, the Titular King of Jerusalem, and the Princes of Europe, An. 1220. During which (being of 18 months continuance) the Famine and the Pestilence so extremely raged, that the Town in a manner was dispeopled, before the Besiegers knew any thing of their condition ; condition: till in the end two venturous Souldiers, admiring the silence and solitude of so great a City, in a Bravado scaled the walls; but found no man to make resistance. The next day the whole Army entered, where they found in every house, and every corner of the streets, whole heaps of dead bodies, none to give them Burial. A lamentable and rueful spectacle! 3 Heros, or Civitas Heroum, in the Arabian Isthmus; at the very bottom of the Gulf; remarkable for the first interview betwixt Jacob and Joseph, after his coming into Egypt. 4 Heliopolis, or the City of the Sun, now called Belzimus, in the Scriptures On, of which Potiphar the Father of Arsenath (whom Pharaoh married unto Joseph) was Priest, or Prince, as is said Gen. 41.45. Given (as Josephus telleth us) for an habitation to the Sons of Jacob; by consequence one of the chief Cities of the Land Rameses, or Goshen; and memorable in times succeeding for a publick Temple built for the Jews, with the consent of Phyladelphus (whom Pharaoh married unto Joseph) the High-Priest, then dispossessed of his Authority and Office by the power of Antiochus: a Temple much esteemed by the Hellenists, or Grecizing Jews; and though Schismatical at the best in its first original, yet not Schismatical and Idolatrous too, as was that of Mount Garizim. 5 Babastis, somewhat more North than Heliopolis, by some of the ancients called Auaris, by the Scriptures Pileseth, another City of that tract; now better known by the name of Zioth: supposed to be the same which the Notitia calleth Casra Judaeorum; memorable in times of Paganisme, for a famous Temple of Diana. 6 Arsinoe, on the shore of the Red Sea, so called in honour of Arsinoe, sister of Philadelphus, and wife to Lyfimachus King of Thrace; afterwards called Cleopatra, in honour of Queen Cleopatra; now better known by the name of Sues. Of great commerce and trading in the time of the Ptolomies: Now almost abandoned; and would be utterly deserted, were it not made the station of the Turkish Gallies, that command the Gulf: which being framed at Caire of such Timber as is brought thither by Sea from the Woods of Cilicia, and sometimes from the shores of the Euxine Sea; are again taken in peeces, carried from Caire unto this City on the backs of Camels, and here joynted together. Conceived to be the same which in former times was called Baal Zephon (of which see Exod. 14.9.) the last incamping-place of the Tribes of Israel, who from hence passed through the Red Sea, as upon dry Land. 7 Gleba Rulra, by the Greeks called Hiera Bolus, and sometimes Erythra Bolus also, more neer the Latine; the redness of the soyl giving name unto it: situate on the River or Trench of Tralan: more memorable for a misfortune that befel it than for any thing else; purposely burnt by Amenophis the fifth, upon this occasion. Being blind, he was assured by some of his Wizards, that if he washed his eyes with the Urine of a Woman, which had never known any but her own Husband, he should be restored unto his sight. After a long search and many vain tryals, he met with one whose water cured him; whom he took to wife: and cauling all the rest whom he had made tryal of, to be brought together to this Town, he set fire on the City, and burnt both it and all the women there assembled; which Tale, if true, is little to the honour of the Dames of Egypt.

Places of most note and observation in the Province of Egypt, strictly and specially so called, are 1 Alexandria situate Westward of the Delta, over against the Isle of Pharos; and built upon a Promontory thrusting it self into the Sea; with which on the one side, and the Lake Mareotis on the other, it is exceeding well defended: the Work of Alexander the Great, and by him peopled with Greeks, immediately after his conquest of Egypt. The Regal Seat of the Ptolomies, whilst Egypt did maintain the State of a Kingdom: and afterwards the Metropolis of it, when a Roman Diocesis. Adorned with many stately buildings; of which most memorable the Serapinus, (or Temple of their God Serapis) for sumptuous workmanship, and the magnificence of the Fabrick, inferior to none but the Roman Capitol: and next to that, the Library erected by Philadelphus, who had stored it with 700000 Volumes; unfortunately burnt in the War against Julius Caesar. A City of great trading, and infinite Riches; phylus empor et diuulpius, the greatest Empory of the World, as is said by Strabo. Wanton with which, the Citizens so abound in all licentiousness both of life, and speech, that they spared not the Emperor himself, if he came in their way. But they paid dearly for their folly. For Caracalla not so patient of a Contumely as some wiser Princes, having felt the lashes of their Tongues, when he was amongst them, assembled all the youth of the City, as if out of them he would have chosen some to attend his Person: and suddenly gave command to his Souldiers, to put them all to the sword. A slaughter so great and universal, that the River Nilus coloured with the blood of the slain, might not improperly at that time be called a Red Sea. In this City, Anno 180. Danteus read both Divinity and Philosophy to all such as would come to hear him: which as it is conceived to give the first hint to the instituting of Universities, in the rest of Christendome; so from that small beginning the Schools of Alexandria grew to great and eminent, that Nazianzen calleth them Naribus indivisiis egregiis, the shop, or work-house, as it were, of all kinds of Learning. Much short of what it was even in point of Trading, especially since the diversion of the Spice Trade from the Bay of Arabia; and utterly divested of those beauties which once it had. Inhabited at the present by a mixture of Nations, *Moor*s, Jews, Turks, Greeks, and Christian Cophites; more for some little gain which they reap by Traffick, than any pleasure in the place. Now called Scandaria by the Turks, remarkable only for the house of the Patriarch (though he dwell for the most part in Caire) and a Church in which S. Mark their first Bishop was said to be buried. 2 Cinopus, situate East of Alexandria, and on the principal branch of the Nile, called Heracleoticum; so called from Canopus the Pilot of Menelaus, who having suffered shipwrack upon this coast, was there interred by his Matter. A Town so branded in old times, for varieties of all kind of beastliness, and Luxury, that as Seneca very well observed, he that avoided the viciousness and debauchery of it, could not scape the infamy: the very place administering matter for suspicion. 3 Rosetta, on the same branch of the River, and not far from Canopus, out of whose ruins it arose; built by a Slave of one of the Egyptian Caliphs; unwall'd and destitute of all Fortifications, but plentifully accommodated with all sorts of commodities, and well frequented by the Merchant. 4 Nicopolis, now called Munia, the Monument of some eminent Victory, and probably of the conquest of Egypt by the Macedonians; the name being Greek, and the Town standing within 30 Furlongs of Alexandria. 5 Aphroditis and Aphroditopolis, so called from Venus who was here worshipped: situate betwixt the two middle branches of the Nile. 6 Sais, betwixt the same branches of the River also; whence that Nomus or Division had the name of Saites. It is now called Sibiti, or Signiti. 7 Plinthine, on the Sea-side; and 8 Hierax, more within the Land: the chief Towns of the Region called Mareotica.

In Aradia, called also Hepanomis, because it contained seven of the Nomi or Divisions, into which Egypt was distributed by the Macedonians, the places of most note were and are 1 Memphis, on the Western banks of Nile, not far from the sharp point of the Delta, where the River first beginneth to divide it self; the Regal City of the old Egyptian Pharaohs: by one of which who removed the Seat Royal from Thebe hither, it is said to be built, and called thus by the name of his daughter. In compass, when it flourished, about 20 miles; great, populous, and adorned with a world of Antiquities; amongst others with the Temples of Apis, Venus, and Serapis, beset with Sphinxes: now nothing left of the Ruines of it, but the Statues of some monstrous Resemblances, sufficient to shew what it hath been formerly. The Pyramides before described, stood not far from hence; to which the Poet relateth, saying, Barbara Pyramidum sileat miracula Memphis.

Of her Pyramides, as before.*

3. Babylon, called for distinctions sake, Babylon Aegyptiorum, built on the other side of the River; and somewhat more unto the North: said to be founded by Cumbyfes the Persian Monarch, the first that made this Kingdom stoop to the yoke of a foreigner; and by him peopled with some Babylonians or Chaldeans, transplanted hither. Great, as appeareth by the ruins; amongst which, many of the Christian Temples and Monasteries do lie there in rubbish; the Castle whereof served long after for the Garrison of the three Legions, appointed to defend this Country in the time of the Romans. This, thought by some to be the Babylon mentioned by S. Peter, in his 1 Epistle cap. ult. which the following words, and Mark my Son, (S. Mark being the first Bishop of the Alexandrians, and the Apostle of Egypt) may make somewhat probable, but the truth and reality hereof, I dispute not now. Out of the ruins of this City arose, 3 Caire, now, and for many Ages past, the chief of this Country: raised from the ashes of old Babylon by the Chaliphs of Egypt, and by the Mamaluks made the Seat-Royal of their Kingdom. In compass not above eight miles, but full of Streets, the number of which said to be 18000. every one of them fortified with a Gate at each end; which being well barred, made every several street an impregnable fortress. Found so by Selimus the first, when he conquered Egypt, who spent three dayes in forcing his way through it with his numerous Army. The private buildings very mean; the publick, especially the Mosques, beyond thought magnificent. Visited every seventh year with a dreadful Pestilence; yet still so populous, that it is conceived to be in good health, if there die not above a thousand in a day, or 300000 within that year. Adorned with many delicate Orchards, both within the City, and without; full of variety of contentments, and neighboured by a pleasant Lake; but made more pleasant by the company which meet there in Boats, for their mutual solace and delights. Fortified at the South end with a stately Castle (the Palace of the Mamaluks Sultans) situate on the top of a Mountain; overlooking the City, and a great part of the Country also. So large, that it seemeth a City of it self, immured with high walls, divided into many partitions of several Courts, in times past the places of exercise; and entered by dores of Iron. Destroyed for the most part, by Selimus, for fear of the giving opportunity to some rebellion; or envying the Mamaluks the glory of having been the Masters of so brave a Mansion: that which is left, now serving for the habitation of the Turkish Bassas, who hath the Government of this Kingdom. 4 Mahared, or Maharea, not far from Caire; the soil whereof is said to be so rich and fertile, that the People are fain to cover it with Sand or Gravel, so moderating the extreme rankness of it. 5 Arsinoe, on the West side of the Nile, and somewhat South of the famous Labyrinth before described; called also (to difference it from another of the same name on the shore of the Red Sea) the City of Crocodiles, in regard of the divine honours there done that Monster. 6 Niopolis, or Nili Civitas, in the Island called Heracleotis, made by the imbracements of the River: most memorable for being the Episcopal Sea of Cheremon, a right godly Prelate; of whom see Eusebius in the 6 Book and 34 Chap. of his Ecclesiastical History. 7 Trois, on the Eastern stream which makes that Island, not much observable but for giving name to the Montes Troici lying near unto it; out of which were digged the stones which made the Pyramides. 8 Cynopolis, in a little Island upon the water. 9 Hermopolis, or the City of Mercury; called also Hermopolis magna, to difference it from another that name not far from Alexandria, to which they give the Adjunct of Parva. 10 Antonius, now Antidi, founded by Adrian the Emperour, in honour of Antonius his especial favourite; the most Southern City of this Province, on the banks of the Nile. 11 Dionysias, or the City of Bacchus, situate on the Southern end of the Lake of Mueris, in the Nomus or Division called Oasis parva. 12 Clymas, upon the shores of the Gulf, a Roman Garrison.

Cities of most note in the Province of Thebais, 1 Panopolis, the Panos of Antoninus, one of the greatest of this part. 2 Ptolomais, the foundation of one of the Ptolomies, and the goodliest City of this Province, succeeding unto Thebe both in power and greatness. 3 Saites, a fair and large Town.

six dayes journey from Caire, going up the water; but by what name called amongst the Ancients, I do nowhere find. Affirmed (erroneously, I think) to be the dwelling-place of Joseph and Mary, when they fled with CHRIST our Saviour from the tury of Herod. Beautified with a goodly Temple, but now somewhat ruinous, of the foundation of Helena the Mother of Constantine. The City much resorted to (on the strength of this Tradition only) by many aged Christian Cophites, who desire to die there. 4 Dispolis, or the City of Jupiter; all of them on the banks of the River. 5 Tentyra, in a little Isle so called, made by the circlings of the Nile: The Inhabitants whereof were the only men who durst encounter the Crocodile: A creature of a terrible name, but a cowardly nature; of which it is said by Ammianus Marcellinus, that it assaulteth those which flee from it, and fleeth from those who do assault it: In that point very like the Devil, of whom it is said by the Apostle James. 4. 7. that if he be resisted, he will flee from us; Or as the good old Poet hath it, Est Leo, si fugias; si stas, quasi Mulca recedit.

*Give ground, a Lyon he will be;
Stand to it, and away flies he.*

6. Coptos, upon the head of a Trench or water-course, which falleth into the Nilus, on the South of Tentyra, but on the other side of the River; in old times, a most noted Empery for Indian and Arabians wares: from whence not only the Christians of this Country, are thought to have the name of Cophites; but the whole Country to be originally called Egyptus, from Ai-Coptus, or the Land of Coptus.

7. Thebe the residence and foundation of that great Tyrant Busris, in compass 140 furlongs, or 17 miles and an half; called also Hecatompyla, from the number of an hundred Gates which were said to be in it. So beautified with Colosses, Temples, Palaces, the Sepulchers of the old Egyptian Pharaohs, and other Ornaments of State, that it was thought πανδαλιανή ἡ πόλις αὐτῶν ἡμετέρας, to be the Nonesuch of the world, Decayed on the removing of the Court of Memphis, it became a ruine so long since, that there was nothing left of it in the time of Juvenal; as he telleth us, saying,

Aique vetus Thebe centum jacet obusta portis.

*Old Thebe, yielding to the Fates,

8. Abydos, now called Aburick, once the Seat-Royal of Memnon, from thence called Memnonium, renowned for the Temple of Osiris; more for the Statute of Memnon, which though made of stone, did at the rising of the Sun yield a vocal sound. 9. Ephantis, on the banks of Nile, neighbouring by Crophi and Mophis, two sharp Rocks, betwixt which the River falling down with a violent current, makes the Lesser Cataract; of which, and of the greater, we shall speak more fully in Ethiopia. The City seated in an Island of the River Nile, on the borders of Ethiopia sub Egypto, (as the Ancients called it) known unto Ptolomy by the name Elephantina, but to our Ecclesiastical writers by the name of Tabenna. Memorable in times of Heathenism for the Town and Temple of Onnechis, wherein stood the Nilometerium or standing pillas, by which they did observe the increase of the River; removed since to the Cattle of Michius, two miles from Caire: in times of Christianity, for the dwellings of infinite numbers of Monks and Hermits, called from this place Tabenisfota. 10. Syne, (now Asina) a little North of Ephantis, situate directly under the Tropick of Cancer, and memorable for a deep Well there digged by some Astronomers; which when the Sun entered into that Sign, was wholly enlightened with his beames, without any shadow: so perpendicularly did the body of it stand over the pit. This the last City of Egypt, towards Ethiopia.

And now I should proceed, according to my Method in other places, to the Story of Egypt: but being that Lybia, and Cyrene, are now accounted Members of it; the fortunes whereof they have also followed in all or most of the mutations of State and Government; I shall first take a view of them as the limbs of this body, and shew you how they were united under that one Head, by which now directed,

2. MARMARICA.

2. LYBIA or MARMARICA, lieth on the East, Egypt, properly so called; on the West Cyrene; on the North, that part of the Mediterranean Sea, which was hence called Mare Lybicum, and sometimes Parthenium; and on the South, some part of Ethiopia Superior.

It had the name of Lybia, from the old Greek word λύβη, signifying Black, agreeable to the complexion of the people, which is black and swarthy; λύβη, antiqua lingua Græca niger, saith a learned Writer: or possible enough from Lub, an Arabian word signifying Thirst, as suitable unto the nature of the soile, which is dry and Sandy, in which respect called by the Greeks, Xero-Lybia, or Lybia sicca. From hence the South-wind, blowing from these Coasts towards Greece and Italy, had the name of Lybi, and the Promontory in Sicilie opposite unto it, that of Lilybaum. It was also called Marmarica, perhaps from the Marmaride, a chief People of it, though placed by Ptolomy in Cyrene; and sometimes Barca, from Burca a chief City in it; of late times Barca Marmarica, by both names united.

The

The Country for the most part very dry and barren, and but meanly peopled; inso much as Alexander passing thorow part of it towards the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, in the space of four dayes saw neither Man, Beast, Bird, Tree, nor River. Covered over in most places with a thick light sand, which the winds remove up and down continually, turning Vallies into Hills, and Hills into Vallies. Found by Cami lyse to his cost, who as basely esteeming of the Gods as he did of his Subjects, sent part of his Army into this Country to destroy the Temple above mentioned: but in the passage towards that prohibited place, fifty thousand, of them were overwhelmed and smothered in a storm of sand; the rest with much ado escaping. Called therefore Xero-Lybia, or Lybia sicca, as before was noted; and Lybia sitiens, thirsty Lybia, (— per calidas Lybiæ sitientis arenas) in that verse of Lucan.

The people, Neighbours unto Egypt, and consequently much of the same condition. Said by Herodotus, (by whom they were called Adrynachide) to be governed by the like Laws and Customs, as the Egyptians were; but to differ from them in their habit. Of colour dark and black, of constitution lean and dry, and inclining to Melancholy; angry on every little occasion, very litigious, and eager prosecutors of their dues. By an old observation amongst themselves, they obtained both from Beef and Hog-meat. So obstinate in denying their accustomed Tributes, that he who could not shew the marks of his sufferings for it, either Black or Blind, was accounted no body: And so resolved to conceal any thing disgraceful to them, that if any of them were apprehended for a Robbery, no torment could compel him to tell his name. At this time, little differing in person, temper, or condition, from the Egyptians, Mours, and Arabers, intermixt amongst them.

Converted to the Faith of Christ, with, or not long after the rest of Egypt, of which then reckoned for a Province, it became part of the Patriarchate of Alexandria; whose jurisdiction over it was confirmed by the Council of Nice: to the calling of which famous Council, this Country occasionally concurred, by bringing into the World that wretched Arian; who with his Heterodoxies and contentious Cavils had disturbed the Church. His Heresie condemned in that famous Council; but his person, by the Divine justice of God, received to a more remarkable punishment. Being sent for by the Emperour Constantine to make a Recantation of his former Heresie, he first writ out a Copy of his own opinions, which he had in his Bosome; and then writing out the Recantation expected from him, took Oath that he did really mean as he had written: which words the Emperour referred to the Recantation, he to the Paper in his bosome. But God would not be so cozened, though the Emperour was. For as he passed in triumph through the streets of Constantinople, he drew aside into a private house of ease, where he voided his guts into the draught, and sent his Soul as an Harbinger to the Devil, to make room for his Body.

Not more infamous for the birth of this Miscreant, who denied the Divinity of Christ; than famous for the birth of one of the Sibyls, hence surnamed Lybica, by whom the same had been fore-shewn. Which Sibyls seem to have taken denomination from Διοῦ Σύβης, i.e. Jovis consiliorum conscia. They were in number ten, viz. 1. Persica, 2. Lybica, 3. Delphica, 4. Cumaen, 5. Samla, 6. Hellepontica, 7. Tiburina, 8. Albunea, 9. Erythraea, and 10. Cumina; which last is affirmed to have written the nine Books of Sibyls. They were all presented by an old Woman to Tarquinius Superbus; but he not willing to pay so great a sum of Money as was demanded, denied them; whereupon the old woman burnt three of them, requiring as much money for the other six, as for all: which being denied, she also burnt an other three, asking as much for the three remaining, as for the rest; which Superbus amazed, gave, and the old Tror vanished. These books contained manifest tokens of the Kingdom of Christ, his Name, his Birth, and Death. They were burned by the Arch-traitor Stilico. So that those Prophecies of theirs, which are now extant, are for the most part only such as had been extracted out of other writings, where their Authority had been quoted. Concerning which, though Caesaron and some other of our great Philologers, conceive them to be piæ fraudes; composed of purpose by the Fathers of the Primitive times, to win credit to the Faith of CHRIST: yet dare I not so far disparage those most Godly men, as to believe they would support so strong an edifice with so weak a prop; or borrow help from falshood, to evict a truth. Or if they durst have been so impudently venturous, how ealie had it been for their learned Adversaries, Prophyrus, Julian, and the rest of more eminent note, to have detected the Imposture, and silenced the Christian Advocates with reproach and scorn? But of this enough here, more at large elsewhere.

Rivers of note I find not any. 'Tis well, if in a Conuntry so full of Sands, there be any at all: some Lakes I meet with in my Authors, the principal of which, 1. Lacus, 2. Lacus Lacomedis, now Linsamos, 3. Clearius; sufficient to preserve their few Cattel from the taint of thirst. The Mountains of note note, those called Anogambri, 2. and that named Azar; this last extended West and East in a straight line, from the 51 degree of Longitude, to the 53. 3. Alphus, 4. Odomus, 5. Tmodus, 6. Alpis, not much observable, but that they serve for Land-marks to discover the Country.

Towns of note there are none now in it. Of most esteem in former times, 1. Batrachus, by some called Menelaus, an Haven-Town, 2. Phbia, and 3. Anesiphra, two Port-Towns also. 4. Tetrargia, so called from its four Towers, the Antipyrgus of Ptolomy. 5. Mesuchis, more within the Land, 6. Mazacila, another midland Town. 7. Charcola, mentioned amongst the chief Cities of this tract, by Anania-nus. 8. Paratonium, now Porto-rassa, which with Pelusium are by Florns called the two Hornes of Egypt; which whosoever held fast, would be sure to master it. By some old writers it had formerly been called Ammonia, as we read in Stephanus and Strabo; from the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, seated very near it. So anciently honoured with an Oracle, (if that were any honour to it) that Semiramis is said to have come hither to enquire of her death; Persus, and Hercules, touching their adventures. The like, but not long after, was done by Alexander the Great: but the Oracle by that time had learnt to flatter; and puffed him up with a proud conceit of being the Son of that God whom he came to worship. The Temple Temple seated in the middle of a vast sandy Desert, environed with a pleasant and delightful Grove, about six miles, or more in circuit; watered with wholesome Springs, refreshed with a temperate air, and shaded with fruit-bearing Trees, which carried in their leaves a perpetual Spring. Portended with a triple wall, within the first whereof was a Royal Palace of the Kings, within the second a Seraglio for his women, in the third Lodgings for the Officers of Court; The Oracle truly placed (so the Priests would have men) in the third Lodgings for the Officers of Court; Before the entrance a fair Fountain, wherein the Oblations were first washed, then offered. A place of great repute in sacred and civil estimate; all the adjoining Country taking hence the name of Ammoniac, and by that name reckoned amongst the Provinces of the Patriarchate of Alexandria. 9 Antiphras, on the East border of it towards Alexandria. 10 Barce, called after wards Ptolemais, by the name of one of the Ptolemies, by whom repaired and beautified. Of such account, that from hence the whole Country had the name of Barce, and the Inhabitants of Barce, (Latēgū parentes Barcei) as in that of Virgil.

The old Inhabitants hereof, were the Libyarchas and Bassachites, in the North; the Ogomi, Bukry, and Adymachida, in the South; the Goniatas, and Prosalitas, in the midland parts; the Libyegyptii, bordering nearest unto Egypt; with the people whereof so intermingled, as to make up betwixt them but one name and nation. Others there were of less, or as little note, but all descended properly of Naphthum, the son of Misraim; from whom the name of Neptunus, originally a Libyan Deity, seems to be derived: yet so that Lobabin, his brother, must come in for a share; as it is conceived, of the Libyegyptii before mentioned. Being then of the same original with those of Egypt, they followed the same fortunes also, till the times of the Ptolemies; by whom sometimes given for portion, with the title of a Kingdom, to their younger Children. By the last will and Testament of Apion, the last King hereof, a Bastard-son of Ptolemy surnamed Euergetes, the seventh King of that house; bequeathed unto the Senate and people of Rome: By whom first suffered to live under them, as a Free-Estate, till the conquest of Egypt; then reckoned as a part of that, and so accordingly described by Ptolemy; where Libya, Marmarica, and Ammonica, occurs amongst the Nomi, or Divisions of it. Afterwards made a distinct Province of that Dioecese, and governed by a Lord President, under the Præfectus Augustalis, or Supreme Commander for the Emperours.

3. CYRENE.

CYRENE is bounded on the East, with Marmarica; on the West, with Africa Propria, or the Realm of Tunis, and some part of the Mediterranean, and the Greater Syrtis; on the North, with the Mediterranean wholly; on the South, with Libya Inferior, or the Deserts of Libya.

It took this name from Cyrene the chief City of it, from whence sometimes also called Cyrenaica; by Pliny and some other Roman Writers it is called Pentapolis, from five chief Cities which were in it, viz. 1 Cyrene, 2 Ptolemais, 3 Arfinoe, 4 Darnis, 5 Berenice: by Ammianus for the same reason Libya Pentapolis, the name of Libya extending over many of these Roman Provinces. And finally, at the present, it passeth with that last described by the name of Barce, or Barca Marmarica: the whole extent whereof in length from the Greater Syrtis, unto Egypt, is no less than 1300 miles, but the breadth not above 200.

The Country in the South parts desolate and barren, stored with few Towns, and not many Villages; the people living up and down in scattered houses, and at such a distance, as if it were in so many Islands. Destitute not of Springs and Rivers only, but of Rain-water too, the Clouds not very often dropping; if any fell, it was dried up presently by the Sands. But within fifteen miles of the Sea, indifferently fruitful, and well inhabited.

The people in old times were said to have been utterly ignorant of buying and selling, of fraud and stealing, not knowing, or not caring for the use of money; content with little, not superfluous in their Cloaths, or buildings; their houses for the most part (except only in their greater Cities) made of Osier-twigs. Much altered in the first part of their Character, since the coming of the Arabians hither; now a Thievish Nation, given wholly to Robbery and spoil. So lazie, that they will not manure, or till their Land, but provide themselves with Corn from Sicily; laying their Children to pawn for it, till by their Thieving they can raise a sufficient sum to discharge the debt.

One only River I find in it, but of fame enough to serve for many; By Ptolemy called Lathon, by Pliny Lethes, by the Poets Lethe. Swallowed by the earth not far from its first original, it riseth up again about Berenice; fained therefore by the Poets to come from Hell, and to create forgetfulness in all them that drink of it; it being the condition of the dead to remember nothing. Thence the occasion of the fancy. Some Lakes I find also in it, whereof one occasioned by this River, not far from the Sea; another more within the land (where indeed more necessary) near Pallurus. With Mountains better stored, (though not much better for them) the principal whereof, 1 Those called Herculis Arena, the Sands of Hercules, thwarting the Country East and West; 2 Bucolicus, on the South of those; and 3 Volpos, a long ridge of hills, bordering upon Africa Propria.

Cities of most note in it, 1 Apollonia, in the East parts, near the Promontory called Zephyrium, in the confines of Libya, or Marmarica. 2 Cyrene, in the West of that; once of such power, that it contended with Carthage for some preeminencies: Then the chief Lady of this tract; which it gave this name to. The birth-place of Erastosthenes the Mathematician, Callimachus the Poet, and of that Simon of Cyrene, whom the Jews compelled to carry our Saviours Cross. 3 Ptolemais, betwixt Cyrene and Arfinoe, built, or repaired by Ptolemy Philadelphus; the Episcopal City of Synesius, a learned and religious religious Bishop of the Primitive times, as appears by his Epistles extant. 4 Arfinoe, on the East-side of the River Lathon; so called in honour of Arfinoe, the sister of Philadelphus, and wife of Magus once King of this Country. 5 Berenice, on the Western bank of the said River; so called from Berenice the Mother, or (another of the same name) the daughter of Magus: the furthest Town of all this Country, bordering on the Promontory called Boreum, and the greater Syrtis. This last a Quick-sand very dangerous to Mariners, in compass 635 miles, and by them carefully avoided. 6 Paliurus, more within the land, but on the borders of Libya, or Marmarica, South to Apollonia. 7 Apinungis, now Langi-fari, by Ptolemy called Apuchi Fanum. 8 Herculis Turris, the Tower of Hercules, near the greater Syrtis; erected in the honour of Hercules, his killing of the Dragon, and robbing the Orchards of the Hesperides of their golden Apples. Those Hesperides said to be Argle, Arethusa, and Hesperethusa, the three daughters of Atlas: their Orchard placed by Ptolemy betwixt this Tower and Paliurus; by Pomponius, in the Atlantick Islands; by Virgil, in Mauritania Tingitania; by Pliny, both in Mauritania and this Cyrene; and possibly in all alike. 9 Zemithus. 10 Acabis in the mid-lands; all worn out of memory. 11 Fessan, of greatest name now, though scarce worth the naming.

The old Inhabitants of this Country, were the Abeka on the East, the Barce near the Greater Syrtis, the Macainta and Laganici, near the Mountains of Hercules; all probably descended from Naphthum the son of Misraim, of whom there still remain some foot-steps in Apuchi Fanum, the Fane or Temple of Apuchus. This Apuchus by some mistakingly called Autuchus, and by the Greeks said to be the son of Cyrene, and the brother of Arifsaus: who being sent out to seek their fortunes, Arifsaus fell into the Isle named Caos; and Apuchus, or Autuchus into Libya, both by them first planted. Neptune, the Deity of this Country, by the Egyptians called Neptimus, seems to come from Naphthum; most highly worshipped by this people, because he first taught them the Art of training horses to the Coach, or Chariot; in which the Cyreneans after grew to expert, that they could drive their Chariots in a round, or circle, and always keep their Chariot-wheels in the self-same track. Of no great power, till Battus a noble Spartan landing in this Country, had built the City of Cyrene; and found it in so good a course of life and Discipline, that in short time it came to have dominion over the most part of this Country, and to contend with Carthage about their Territories. Warred on by Apyres King of Egypt, they sued unto the Greeks for aid, and by their assistance overcame him. Long after which, falling at odds among themselves, they craved aid of Ptolemy the first of that race; by whom they were finally subdued. Left by him at his death to Magus, a Son of his last wife by a former husband, whom he had married to Arfinoe one of his daughters; it came again to the Crown of Egypt, by the marriage of Berenice the daughter and Heir of Magus, with the Son of Ptolemy Philadelphus. Alienated from which Crown again, for the preferment of some of the younger Princes; and in the end given by one of the Ptolemies, the last King hereof, to the people of Rome. Reduced into the form of a Province by Augustus Caesar, by whom united in one Government with the Isle of Crete; but made a Province of it self by the following Emperours: never since separated from the fortune and affairs of Egypt, to which now we hasten.

That the Kingdom and Nation of Egypt was of great Antiquity, is not a matter to be doubted; the question in this point, betwixt them and the Scythian, being not easily decided. Whether it were so ancient, as the Egyptians say, may perhaps be controverted. By them it was affirmed, that they had the memory and story of 13000 years; and a succession of 330 Kings in the time of Amasis the second, who was Contemporary with Cyrus. Which number of years, if understood of Solar years, measured by the course of the Sun, must not be allowed of; because it maketh them many thousand years older than the Creation; but if of Lunar, which is most agreeable unto the account of the Egyptians, who reckoned their years by months: it will amount unto no more than 1000, or 1100 years, and so fall answerably to the times following after the Flood. But for their Kings, 330 in their reckonings, and those of 24 or 25 several Dynasties; the matter is not so soon made up. For either those Kings, must not be all Kings or Supreme Lords of Egypt, as the Pharaohs were, but their several Regents, or Viceroyents, armed with Regal power; those Dynasties not the successions of so many Regal Families, but of their Substitutes and Lieutenants, many of which might live successively under one Supreme; or else we must needs look on Egypt as distracted in those times, into several Kingdoms, amongst the Princes of those Dynasties before remembred; or finally, we must look for some of those Kings and Princes before the Flood. By either of these wayes, the business may be well agreed. For if that most of them were but the names of several Regents, (as probable enough it is) there might be many such in the reign of one King; according to the Kings fancy, the merit of particular persons, or the necessities of State: Changes of great Officers, especially if grown too great, are not new nor strange. If they were all Kings, or Supreme Rulers, (as is also probable) we find not any thing of moment to persuade the contrary, but that many of them lived and reigned in their several parts (as in other Countreys in those times) till the greater had devoured the less. Or if they were the names of such Sovereign Princes, as had the sole command of Egypt before the Flood, (as some think they were) they might amount in all to so great a number, and so many Dynasties; the iniquity of those times, the ambition of great persons, and consequently the short lives of the Kings being duly pondered. That Egypt and most part of the World was peopled before the Flood, hath been already proved in our General Preface: If peopled, then no question under some form of Government: the names of which Governments (call them Kings, or Rulers, or what else we please) might be preserved in Egypt on pillars of brass or stone; or otherwise transmitted by tradition unto Cham the Father of Misraim, by whom this Country was first planted after the Confusion of Babel. But that old stock of Kings and people being destroyed in the general Deluge, the Children of Misraim succeeded next in their desolate dwellings: yet so, that

- himself to be Crowned King of Syria, but again relinquished it, 35.
- 3829 7 Ptol. Euergetes II. for his deformity called Physcon the brother of Ptol. Philometor; a wicked Prince, and one that spent the greatest part of his reign in a causeless war against Cleopatra, his Wife and Sister, 29.
- 3858 8 Ptol. Latharus reigned 16 years with Cleopatra his Mother, by whom dispossessed of his Estate for the space of ten years; after her death was sole Lord of Egypt. His brother Alexander being taken by the Queen-mother as her Associate, in the time of his deprivation, and passing in the account of the Kings of Egypt.
- 3892 9 Ptol. Auletes, the Son of Latharus, surnamed also Dionysius, whose brother being seized by him in the Isle of Cyprus, was most unjustly stripped of it by the power of the Romans; and he himself ousted of Egypt by his own subjects, but restored by the aid and love of Pompey.

These Ptolemaean Princes of Egypt, were for the most part in wars with the Kings of Syria, in which they were by turns victorious, and vanquished; neither Prince having cause to boast of his bargain. After the death of Cleopatra, whose life and love with Marcus Antonius I will not now relate, this Country fell to the share of the Roman Emperours, and was by them highly prized, and warily looked into. The Governour hereof was but a Gentleman of Rome; no Senator being permitted to come into it; it being a maxim of State, not to suffer men of great houses to come into that Country, whose revolt may endanger the whole Empire. Of this nature was Egypt. For besides the natural situation of the place, very defensible; and besides the abundance of Money, with which it was vested; this Country alone furnished the City of Rome with Corn, for four Months yearly. Whence Vespasian being chosen Emperor by the Syrian Legions, and hearing of the defeat of his concurrent Vitellius, bateden hither: to this end only, that detaining the ordinary provision of Victuals, he might by famine compel the City of Rome to stand at his devotion: Ut urbem quoque externe opis indigam fame urgeret, as the Historian hath observed. When made a Province of that Empire, it was counted as the Emperours sole Peculiar: afterwards made (as well it might) an entire Diocese of it self, subordinate to the Præfæctus Prætoris Orientis. In the division of the Empire allotted to the Constantinopolitans, whose Government being thought to be insupportable by this wanton people, they called in the Saracens: by whom the Greek Garrisons were cast out, and the Country made subject to Hammar the third of the Caliphs. Afterwards, weary of them also, they would have a Caliph of their own, revolting totally from the Caliph of Bagdat. So that from this time forwards we shall meet with two Caliphs at a time; the one residing at Cairo in Egypt, to whom the Saracens, or Moors of Spain and Africk did submit themselves: the other at Bagdat, who Lorded it over all the rest, at least as to the Supream title, and some chief Prerogatives; though the main power was cantoned and disposed of among their Sultans.

The Third DYNASTY, or the CALIPHS of EGYPT.

know, that Elphaiz the Father of Etzar, being overpowered by Americus King of Hierusalem, craved aid of Norradine the Turkish Sultan of Damascus; which he received under the conduct of Sarracon, or Shirachoch, a right valiant and stout Commander: who taking his advantages, not only cleared the Country of Americus, but got the whole Kingdom to himself; dashing out the brains of Elphaiz with his Horseman's Mace. And though Etzar his Son assumed for a while the title of Caliph; yet the destruction of himself, and the whole Phatimean Family, rooted out by Sarracon, soon put an end to that claim; and left the Kingdom in the peaceable possession of the Turkish Sultans.

The Fourth DYNASTY, or the Race of the TURKISH KINGS or CALIPHS of EGYPT.

- 1163 1 Afereddin, surnamed Shirachoch, called Sarracon, by the Christian Writers; the first of the Turks which reigned in Egypt: of the Noble Family of Ainh.
- 1186 2 Zeli-beddin, called Saladine by the Christian Writers, the Son (or as some say, the nephew) of Sarracon or Shirachoch; confirmed in his Estate by the Caliph of Bagdet, under whose jurisdiction he reduced the Egyptian Schismatics. He obtained also the Kingdom of Damascus, conquered Mesopotamia, and Palestine; and in the year 1190. regained the City of Hierusalem. A Prince who wanted nothing to commend him to succeeding Ages, nor to glorify him in the Kingdom of Heaven, but the saving knowledge of CHRIST JESUS.
- 1199 3 Elaziz, the second Son of Saladine, succeeded in the Realm of Egypt; which he exchanged afterwards with his brother Eladel for the Kingdom of Damascus.
- 4 Eladel, or El-Aphtzel, by the Christian Writers called Meledine, succeeded upon this exchange, in the Kingdom of Egypt: and overcame the Christians, without the loss of a man, at the siege of Caïre, by letting loose the Sluces of Nilus; which drowned their Army, and forced them to covenant with him at his own pleasure.
- 1210 5 Elchamul.
- 1237 6 Melech Essalach, by the Christian Writers called Melechfala, the son of Elchamul, who overcame Lewis the 9th of France: and going with that King towards Damietta, was slain by the Souldiers of his guard, called Mamalucks.
- 1242 7 Elmutan, the Son of Melech Essalach, succeeded, for a time, in his Fathers throne. But the Mamalucks being resolved to obtain the Kingdom for themselves, enforced him to flee to a Tower of Wood, which they set on fire; the poor Prince, half burned, leaping into a River (which ran close by it) was there drowned: and the Mamalucks settled in the Kingdom, An. 1245.

These Mamalucks were the Offspring of a People on the banks of the Euxine Sea, vulgarly called the Circassians: whom Melechfala either bought of their Parents, or (at the second hand) of the Tartars, then newly Masters of those Countreys, to supply the want of valour in the idle and effeminate people of Egypt; and out of them selected a choice Band of men, for the Guard of his person. Knowing their strength, and finding their opportunity, they treacherously slew Melechfala their Lord and Maker; appointing one Azeddin Ulek, a Turcoman by Nation, and therefore by most Christian Writers called Targumensis, (one of their own number) a man of great spirit and valour, to succeed in the Throne. Unwilling to re-give the Supreme Authority into the hands of the Egyptians; and not permitting their own sons to enjoy the name and privilege of Mamalucks; they bought yearly certain numbers of Circassian slaves, whom they committed to the keeping of the Egyptians, by them to be instructed in the Egyptian language, and the Law of Mahomet. Being thus fitted for employment, they were taught the Discipline of War, and by degrees advanced unto the highest Offices of Power and trust; as now the Janizaries are in the Turkish Empire: in choice and ordering of whom, as the Ottoman Turks were preceded by those of Egypt, so it is possible enough that the Janizaries may make as great a Change in the Turkish Empire, as the Mamalucks did in the Egyptian. So unsafe a thing it is for a Prince to commit the sole guard of his person, or the defence of his Dominions, to the hands of such, whom nor the sense of natural duty, but the hopes of profit or preferment, may make useful to him. For thus we finde, that Constantine a King of the Britains, was murdered by his Guard of Pilts: most of the Roman Emperours, by the hands of those whom they intrusted, either with the guard of their persons, or the command of their Armies: And I think no man can be ignorant, how many times the Princes and Estates of Italy, have been brought into the extreamest dangers, by trusting too much to the honesty of mercenary Souldiers and Commanders. Take we for instance the proceedings of Giusepe Piccino, who with his Followers first took Pay of Ferdinand the first of Naples; left him, to fight for his vowed Enemy, John Duke of Calabria, the Son of Rene Duke of Anjou; whom he also forsook in his greatest need. The like we finde of Francisco Sforza, first entertained by the Duke of Milan, from whom he revolted to the Florentines, from them to the Venetians; and being again received into the Pay of the State of Milan, made use of their own Army to subdue that City.

is said to have doubled: But whether he had it all in Money, or part hereof in Money, and the rest in Corn, I determine not. Certain it is, that there was yearly shipped hence for Rome, in the time of that Emperour, Two hundred thousand Measures of Wheat, every Measure weighing Twenty hundred pound weight; which cometh to Seven Millions and an hundred forty thousand of our English Bushels; sold by him, or distributed gratis amongst the Poor, as he saw occasion. So that there might be very well some abatement in Money, considering that the Corn amounted to so great a sum. Nor were they much less, if ought at all, when the Mamucks ruled in this Countrey. For Campson Gaurus, at his coming to the Throne, gave no less than Ten Millions of Ducats, at one clap, amongst his Souldiers. But the Turks at this day, partly through their Tyrannical Government, and partly through the discontinuance of the usual Traffick through the Red Sea, receive no more than Three Millions of Crowns; one of which is hoarded in his own Coffers; the second is appropriated unto his Vicegerent Bashaw, for support of his charge; the third is distributed among his Garrison-souldiers, and such of them as by Land guard his own Million to Constantinople; for by Sea he dareth not venture it, for fear of the Florentine, who with a few Ships Lordeth it in the Mediterranean.

And so much for EGYPT.

OF BARBARY.

BARBARY is bounded on the East; with Cyrenica; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Mediterranean, the Straits of Gibraltar, and some part of the Atlantick also; on the South, with Mount Atlas, by which separated from Lybia Inferior, or the Desarts of Lybia.

It containeth in it the whole Dioecse of Africk, and part of the Dioecse of Spain: subject in former times to the Commonwealth of Carthage, and the great Kings of Mauritania, an Numidia. When conquered by the Romans, they gave to that part of it, which they won from the Carthaginians, the name of Africa; calling that Province by the name of the whole Peninsula; and afterwards extended it over all the rest of the Country, on the North of Atlas. Which name it held till the subjugation of it by the Saracens, by whom called BARBARY: either from Barbar, signifying in their language an uncertain murmur, such as the speech of the Africans seemed to them to be; or from the word Bar, signifying a Desart, which doubled, made up first Barbar, and after Barbary.

It is situate under the third and fourth Climates: so that the longest Summers day in the parts most South, amounteth to thirteen hours three quarters, increased in the most Northern parts to fourteen hours and a quarter. In length extended from the Atlantick Ocean to the greater Syrtis, for the space of 1500 miles; in breadth from Mount Atlas to the Mediterranean, where narrowest, 100 miles; but towards the Straits, where broadest, almost three hundred.

The Countrey in such parts as lie nearest to the Mediterranean, is full of hills, covered with woods, and stored with plenty of Wild-beasts; provided reasonably well of most sorts of Fruits, but unfit for Wheat, inasmuch that most of the Inhabitants live of Barley-bread. Betwixt which and Mount Atlas is a Champaign Countrey, watered with many pleasant Rivers issuing from that Mountain, and liberally furnished with Cherries, Figs, Pears, Plums, Apples of all kinds; abundance of Oyl, Honey, Sugar; some Mines of Gold, and that for purity and fineness no where to be bettered. Here are also besides large Herds of Cattel, some Elephants, Lions, Dragons, Leopards, and others of the like savage nature, and of Apes great multitudes; Horses good store, of excellent both strength and beauty. But taking it in the best parts, it falleth extremely short of that infinite fertility; which is ascribed to it by the Writers of elder times. For besides the miracle of five hundred Ears of Corn growing on one stalk, (whereof more anon) Pliny reporteth, that not far from the City of Tacape, in the way to Leptis, a man might see a great Date-tree overshadowing an Olive, under the Olive a Fig-tree, under that a Pomgranat, under that a Vine, and under all, Pease, Wheat, and Herbs; all growing and flourishing at one time. It is affirmed also by the same Author, that the Vine beareth twice a year, that some fruits or other are gathered in it at all times of the year; and that a piece of ground of four cubits square, was usually rented out at so many Dinarii: by which accompt, (as the learned Budaus doth compute it) an Acre of that ground must be worth yearly, 12800 of the Roman Sestertii, which make 320 Crowns. An infinite and unparalleled increase of the Fruits of the Earth, if the Author were not out in his valuation.

The people are of a dusky colour, but inclining to blackness; much of the same nature with the Arabians, by whose numerous families formerly they were overspread; but the Africans of the two the better: active of body, well skilled in Horsmanship, but impatient of labour; covetous of honour, inconstant, crafty, and unfaithfull: studious in matters of their Law, and in some of the Liberal Sciences, especially Philosophy and the Mathematicks, of which in many parts of the Mahometan Countreys they are admitted to be Readers: They are also said to be stately of gate, exceeding distrustfull, in their hate implacable, and jealous of their women beyond all compare. The women of a comely body, and well featured, beautiful in blackness, of delicate soft skins; and in their habit and apparel beyond measure sumptuous: so drest, to make themselves more amiable in the eyes of their husbands; for otherwise not permitted to stir abroad, and seldom to see any body but those of their own houses.

The Language spoken at the present in most of the Maritime Towns, except those of Fesse and Morocco, is the Arabic tongue. In those two Kingdoms, and most part of the Countrey-Villages, the Punick or old African, the ancient languages of the Countrey: the Punick spoken in all places where anciently the Carthaginians were of any power; the African (whatsoever it was) in the parts of Mauritania, not subject to them. Of the Latine there is no remainder; which though it was the Language of the Roman Colonies, yet never could it spread so far as to extinguish or suppress the old natural tongues: and in the Colonies themselves so much degenerated in short time, so barbarously and imperfectly spoken; that a Sister of the Emperour Severus, who lived in Leptis, a Roman Colony, coming to Rome to see her Brother, spoke it so incongruously, that the Emperour was ashamed to hear it. And though the Sermons of S. Augustine, an African Bishop, were preached in Latine, because preached in Hippo his Episcopall See, which was then a Colony of the Romans; yet he confesseth that he was sometimes faine to use such words as were not Latine, to be the better understood of his Congregation.

The

The Christian Faith was first planted, in that part hereof, which was called Africa Propria, by Epaenetus, one of the 70 Disciples; by Dorotheus in his Synopsis, affirmed to be the first Bishop of Carthage: In Mauritania, by S. Simon the Apostle, surnamed Zelotes. Metaphrastes addeth, that S. Simon Peter preached here also, when by the Decree of Claudius Caesar he was forced from Rome; and at his going hence, left Crescens his Disciple to promote the work. But by whomsoever planted first, it found good increase, and was so propagated in short time over all this Country, that in the year 250. or before, there were in it above 90 Bishops; for so many were assembled in the Synod of Labesum: and in the year 398. when the faction of the Donatists was of greatest power, we finde no fewer than 214 Catholic Bishops, met together in the Council of Carthage. Which as it is an argument of the great increase of Christianity in those parts of Africa; so it shews also that the Church was in ill condition; so overpowered by the violence of that mighty faction, who had at least 270 Bishops of their own opinion; that the Orthodox party was necessitated to increase the number of Bishops, for fear of being over-balanced by the contrary side, if ever the difference should come to be examined in a public meeting. These Bishops ranked into six Classes, according to the number of the African Provinces: the Bishops of each Province subject to their own Metropolitan, who in this Dioecese (contrary to the usage of all other Churches) had the name of Primates: but all of them subordinate to the Primate of Carthage, originally invested with Patriarchal jurisdiction over all these parts. Latius fusa est nostra Provincia: Habet enim Numidiam, & Mauritania duas sibi coherentes, are S. Cyprian's words. Which shew, that Leo Africanus was a better Geographer, than an Historian or Divine. He would not else have told us in such positive terms, that those of Barbary remained in their old Idolatri, till 250 years before Mahomet's birth; at what time they received the Gospel, and not before. But the good man mistook the reviving of the Orthodox faith, in the time of Justinian, after it had been long suppressed by the Vandals of the Arian faction (who at one time banished hence 300 Catholic Bishops) for the first planting of the Gospel. Otherwise not to be excused. But after this Reviver, it held not long, when suppressed by the Saracens, and so suppressed, that except it be in some few Towns possessed by the King of Spain, and the Crown of Portugal, there is no tract of Christianity to be discerned in all this Country; Mahometism being elsewhere universally embraced amongst them.

Amongst the men of most note for Souldiery, which have been born in this Country, we may reckon Amilcar the Carthaginian, and his three sons: 2 Annibal, 3 Asdrubal, and 4 Mago; men hardly to be paralleld in any Ages: 5 Masfinissar, King of the Numidians, one of their Contemporaries: and in the following times, 6 Septimius Severus, the Roman Emperour. Amongst those addited to the Muses, those of most note, 1 Terence, 2 Apuleius. But for Divines, no Region in the world afforded men of more eminent note, nor better deserving of the Church. 1 Tertullian, 2 Cyprian, 3 Julius Africanus, 4 Arnobius, 5 Lactantius, 6 Victorinus Afer, 7 Optatus Meleвитanus, 8 Vidor Uticensis, 9 Fulgentius 10 Primasius. And above all, the most learned and divine S. Augustine; a man of such admirable abilities, and indefatigable industry, so constant a Defender of all Orthodox doctrines against the Heresies of those times, that he deservedly got the name of Mullens Hereticorum.

Principal Mountains of this Country besides Mount Atlas, (of which hereafter by it self) 1 Phorce, 2 Heptadelpus, and 3 Atlas minor in Mauritania Tingitana; 4 Cinnaba, 5 Garae, 6 Madethubadus, and 7 those called Gariphi, in Cesariensis; 8 Thambes, 9 Mampfarus, 10 Usaleus, and 11 Zuchabarnus, in Africa Propria. Of which, and others, we may speak more, if occasion be, in our description of the Provinces in which they are. And for the Rivers of most note, though none of any long course in so narrow a Country; we have in Tingitana, 1 Sala, falling into the Atlantic, out of Atlas minor; 2 another of the same name, and the same exit also, but far more to the North, towards the Streit of Gibraltar; 3 Molochuth, mollified by Saluts the Historian into Mulucha, and by him placed betwixt the Numidians and the Moors; 4 Malva, the boundary at this day, betwixt the Kingdoms of Fesse and Algiers; 5 Phihuth, of more fame than any, of which more anon: in Cesariensis, 6 Nasabath, 7 Sifaris, and Sorbetos: in Africa Propria, or the Kingdom of Tunes, 8 Rubicatus, which issuing out of Mount Thambes, falleth into the Mediterranean near Hippo Regius; 9 Triton, which issuing out of the hill called Usaleus, and making the great Fenn called Tritonia Palus, endeth its course also in the Mediterranean; and finally, 10 Bagradas, the greatest in all this tract, which rising out of Mount Atlas, first runneth towards the East, and then receiving from the hill called Mampfarus the addition of another Stream, passeth directly Northward to the City of Utica, and there ends his course.

Having thus laid together the chief Metes and Land-marks, I should now proceed to the description of the several Provinces hereof, as in other places. But because each part almost hath had for these later times its particular History, and that it is divided at the present into several Governments, and under the command of several Princes: I will here lay down so much of the Story of it as concerns the whole, before such division; and afterwards pursue the History and Geography of the several parts. And for the whole we are to know, that this Country was first peopled by Phut the third Son of Cham: who leaving his brother Misraim well settled in the Land of Egypt, passed towards the West; and leaving Lehabim his nephew betwixt him and Misraim, possessed himself of all the rest from the greater Syris to the Ocean. Remainders of whose name we finde in the River Phut, (by Ptolomy called Phihuth, with but little difference, save that it favoureth more of the African roughness) near which Jesephus findeth a Region called the Country of Phut, a Nation called the Phuteans: seconded herein by S. Hierom, who speaking of this Regio Phutenfis in Mauritania, (where the River Phut is placed by Ptolomy) voucheth in general terms the testimony of old Writers, both Greek and Latine. So that of this there is no question to be made. Such Nations as descended of this Plantation, shall be hereafter spoke of in their several Provinces. Governed at first by the Chiefs of their several families; but in the end, reduced duced under the command of the Kings of Mauritania, and Numidia, and the State of Carthage. The two first, Natives of this Country, of the race of Phut; the last descended also of the seed of Cham, their common Parent, by the line of Canaan: who on the conquest of their Country by the Children of Israel, forced to seek new dwellings, and having store of Ships to transplant themselves and their Families; settled in the maritime parts of Mauritania, and Africa properly so called. For, that the people of those parts, though lost into other names and families, were anciently of a Canaanitish, or Phenician race, may be made apparent, 1 By the nearness of their Language, the Punic, or Phenician, and old Hebrew tongue, differing only in the dialect and pronunciation. 2 By the name Tani, or Phani, little differing from that of the Phenices. 3 By this testimony of S. Augustine, who telleth us in the Comment on St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, begun, but not finished by him; Interrogati Rustici nostri quid sint, respondent Punici Chanani; that is to say, that when any of the Inhabitants of this Country (he himself was one) were asked what they were, they answered, Chanaanites. 4 By we finde in Herodotus, how Cambyses having totally conquered Egypt, intended a war against the Carthaginians, who were then a State (it seemeth) of some power: but the Phenicians, being the only Sea-faring men Cambyses then had, absolutely denied to be employed in that service; they being sprung from the same Tree, that the Carthaginians were. 5 By we read in Procopius, (out of which it is cited by Evagrius Scholasticus) how on two marble-pillars, situate nigh unto Tingis, or Tanger, there was in the Phenician language and Character engraved, Nos fugimus a facie Josuah predonis, filii Nave; that is to say, We flee from the face of that Robber, Josuah the son of Nun. The settling of this people there, a great incitement questionless unto Dido, to come thither also: who feared as much danger from her brother Pygmalion King of Tyre, whose hands had been embred in the blood of her husband; as the others did from the sword of Josuah. Gathering together all her Treasures, which were very great, accompanied with her brother Barca, and her sister Anna, she set sayl for Africk; and landing in the Bay, where after stood the City of Carthage, she obtained leave to build a Fort of no greater bigness, than she could compass round with an Oxes hide. This the beginning of that City; hence the name of Byrsa, which at first it had. First founded in, or about the year of the world 3070. which was about 144 years after the building of Solomon's Temple; 143 years before the building of Rome, and about 290 years from the destruction of Troy. By which account (I note this only by the way) it is impossible that Dido, or Elisa (for by both these names we finde her called) should ever see the face of Aeneas, unless it were in picture, or imagination; and therefore as impossible she should either fall in love with him, or be got with Child by him, or finally kill her self on her being forsaken. All which being delivered by Virgil in his excellent Poem, did for long time obtain a general belief with most sorts of men. Hereunto consenteth Ansonius, who honouring the Statue of this abused Princess with an Epigram of 18 Verses, amongst others gives us these four.

*Invida cur in me simulasti Musæ Maronem,
Fingeret ut nostra divina pudicitia?
Pos magis Historicis (Lectores) credite de me,
Quam qui furta dictæ, concubitusque canunt.*

Why didst thou stir up Virgil, envious Muse,
Falsly my name and honour to abuse?
Of me let Histories be heard, not those,
Who to the World, Jove's thefts and lusts expose.

Credible it is, that Aeneas being driven on the Coast of Africk, was by some Prince their courtously entertained, as a man whose fame had been his harbinger: but why the story should be fastned on Dido, I see not. Perhaps the unfortunate death of this Queen, who laid violent hands on her self, gave occasion to the Poet to fain, that it was for the love of Aeneas: whereas it was indeed to avoid the lust and fury of Iarbas, a potent King of the Gethuli, a powerful Nation neighbouring those parts of Africa, in which Carthage stood, who violently desired to have his pleasure on her.

But to proceed; This City thus founded in a place commodious for Trade and Merchandise, in short time grew exceeding wealthy. And having wealth enough to hire mercenary Souldiers (of which the needy Mauritanians, and Numidians, did afford good store) they conquered all the Sea-Coasts from Cyrene to the Streits of Hercules (now called the Streits of Gibraltar): and so much also towards the South, as was worth the conquering; within which space possessed of 300 Cities. Grown to such height, that all the African Kings and Princes, and amongst them the Kings of Numidia, and Mauritania, were at their devotion: They began to cast their eyes on Sicily, a wealthy Island, lying near unto their Coast; which questionless they had possessed, if the Romans envious of their greatness, and fearing their neighbourhood, had not took upon them the defence of the Mamertines, and under that pretence got some footing in it. The end of this war, after many brave exploits on both sides, was the driving the Carthaginians out of Sicily: their abandoning all the Islands betwixt them and Italy, and the payment of 3200 Talents, amounting to about two Millions of Crowns. And such end had the first Punic war, managed for the most part in Sicily. During which time, and the first war there managed by the Carthaginians, Africk it self was twice invaded: first by Agathocles Tyrant of Syracuse, (or so commonly called) and afterwards by Regulus a Roman General, but with no other great success, than the spoil of the Country. The second followed not long after, but the Scene was altered; begun in Spain, prosecuted in Italy, and ended in Africk. Begun by Annibal the son of Amilcar, descended from Barca the brother of Dido or Elisa: who having conquered a great part of Spain, and thereby both increased his reputation and experience, conducted his victorious Army through Gaul, and over the Alpes, into Italy it self; defeated the Armies of the Romans, and slew some of their Consuls: so prosperous in the battle of Canna, where the whole strength of Rome was broken, that had he followed his good fortune, and made use of his Victory, he might within four or five days after have dined in the Capitol. Having for 18 years together held them work in Italy, he was called home to defend Africa from the forces of Scipio; who having driven the Carthaginians out of Spain, had very prudently translated the war to Carthage. The issue was, that on the loss of the battle of Nadagara, the Carthaginians were necessitated to submit themselves to the will of the Conquerour: that is to say, to deliver up all their Elephants, together with all their Ships, and Gallies excepting ten; to make no war without leave of the Romans, to pay for the charges of the war, 10000 Talents; and such other extremities. So ended the 2^d Punic war, An. V. C. 602. And the third followed not long after, nor any way occasioned by those of Carthage, but out of the inveterate hatred of the people of Rome, who would not think themselves safe whilst that City stood; and therefore sent another Scipio to lay siege unto it. By whom, after a long and stout resistance, it was at last taken and destroyed: the Treasure which was found in it, notwithstanding their former losses, and the low estate it was reduced to, besides what was consumed by fire, and reserved by the Souldiers, amounting to 470000 pound weight of silver, which cometh to a Million, four hundred and ten thousand pounds of our English Money.

Dido

Such end had Carthage, and therewith all the rest of the States of Africa, who though in hatred to the Carthaginians they had armed against her, and aided the Romans in these wars; yet they soon found their own fortunes buried in the self-same Grave. Subverted one after another, as occasion was, they became all subject unto Rome; their Kingdoms and Estates turned to Roman Provinces. Of these were reckoned seven in all, that is to say, 1 Africa Propria, called also Zengitana, and Proconsularis, 2 Byzacena, 3 Tripolitana, 4 Numidia, 5 Mauritania Casariensis, 6 Sitensis, and 7 Tingitana. Of which the last (I know not why) was laid to the Diocefe of Spain, called therefore Hispania Transfretana, Spain on the other side of the Sea, by some elder Writers: the other six made up the Diocefe of Africa, subordinate to the Præfatus Prætorio for Italy, who had here his Vicarius, or Lieutenant. In this condition it continued, till subdued by the Vandals, a German Nation, inhabiting beyond the Elb, on the Coast of the Baltick; where now lie the the Dukedoms of Mecklenbourg and Pomerania. Their memory still retained there in the title of those Princes, who call themselves Duces Vandalarum; and in the Confederacy of the Hanse-towns, called by some Latine Writers, Civitates Vandalice. A Nation of great power, and numbers, (the Burgundians being only a part of these) one of the five into which Pliny doth divide the Germans. In the 11th year of the Empire of Arcadius and Honorius, they were invited into Gaul, by the treacherous practices of Stilico, Lieutenant of the Western Empire; and after an abode of three years, passed into Spain, together with the Suevi, and Alani, their Associates. But after 18 years, the Goths made that place too hot for them also. So that they could not but willingly accept the offer of Bonifacius, the Emperours Vicegerent in Africa: who intomacking to see his Office bestowed on Cassinus an unworthy man, and his enemy, betrayed the Country to these Vandals, in the last year of the life and reign of Gunderic, an Arian in Religion, as were the rest of the Nation, to which induced by their neighbourhood and acquaintance with the Goths: which Herese as they brought with them into Africa, driving thence all the Orthodox Christians, so they continued in it till their extirpation.

428 2 Genferius, who at the request of Eudoxia the Widow of Valentinian, invaded Italy, and sacked the City of Rome, the Spoil whereof for 14 days he gave to his Souldiers: but at the request of Eudoxia, whom he afterward married, he did not burn it. This Eudoxia was wife to the Western Emperour Valentinian; who having a minde to a Lady of Rome, the wife of one Maximus, he cunningly slipped the Ring of Maximus off his finger, and by that token sent for the Lady to the Court; and when she was come, ravished her. To revenge this disgrace, Maximus slew Valentinian, made himself Emperour, and forced Eudoxia to be his wife. But reigning in Italy; against whom he proceeded very fortunately: but being, on I know not what envy, called to Constantinople, his eyes were put out, and he was forced to beg his bread at the Gate of the Temple of S. Sophia. A bad reward for so good a servant. But to go on, Justinian having regained Africa, to honour his new Conquest, exempted it for the command of the Prætorio-Præfatus of Italy, to which formerly subject; and encreasing the number of the African Provinces by the addition of the Isle of Sardinia, made it a Præfecture of it self: appointing his Præfatus Prætorio Africa to reside in Carthage, as the chief City of his charge; which he then also raised to a Consular Province, having in former times been Proconsular only. But long it held not in this Rate: For in the year 647. the Romans were finally expelled by Hueba, a famous Leader, whom Osman, the third Caliph of the Saracens, had designed to this service. Africa, from that time forwards, reckoned amongst the Provinces of the Saracenic or Mahometan Empire. But in the end, the Authority of the Caliphs growing less and less, and every one of their Sultans or Provincial Officers, getting what he could for himself; this Country was distracted into many Kingdoms and Principalities, but all at last reduced to four of most consideration: that is to say, the Kingdoms of 1 Tunis, 2 Tremesen or Algiers, 3 Fesse, and 4 Morocco. To the Geography and History whereof we do now proceed; adding hereto in the fifth place, the Isles of Barbary.

1. TUNIS.

The Kingdom of TUNIS (in Latine called Regnum Tunetanus) hath on the East Cyrene; on the West, the Kingdom of Algiers, or Tremesen; on the North the Mediterranean; on the South Mount Atlas. So called from Tunis the chief City of it; extended all along the Coast of the Mediterranean for the space of 800 miles or thereabout, but the breadth not answerable.

The Country towards the East, barren and destitute of water; but in the Western parts, sufficiently plentiful of Corn, and other Fruits, and generally well set with Trees. The people more patient of labour than the rest of Barbary, and for that cause perhaps more healthy: but questionable of so good constitution, that they live commonly to great age, unless a violent death prevent them; and are not much afraid of sickness, or much troubled with it.

It contains in it the two whole Provinces of Africa Propria (or Africa Minor, as some call it) and the Numidia of the Romans; called since Numidia Antiqua, to difference it from the present Numidia, lying on the other side of Mount Atlas. The principal Mountains of which Countries, besides those spoken of already, were 1 Andas, 2 Buzara, 3 Cinna, 4 Dias, or the Hills of Jupiter, 5 Gillins, by some named Gigion, and 6 those called Thizibi. Rivers of most esteem with them, though not much with others, besides those mentioned before. 1 Ampsige, now called Colb, and by some Sas Gemar, which divideth this Kingdom from that of Tremesen; 2 Catuda; 3 Cyniphat, issuing from the Hills called Zuchabarus, and falling into the Sea not far from Tripolis. Besides which there were some great Lakes; the chief whereof, 1 Hippontes near Mount Cinna; 2 the Lake of Pallas, or that called Palus Tritonia, where Minerva was said to have shewed her self the Inventress of Spinning and of Oyl, and for that much worshipped by this people; 3 Sylura, another great Lake; but not so famous as the former, because not honoured by a Goddess.

The whole divided by the Romans into these four parts, viz. 1 Africa specially so called, lying on the Sea, from the River Ampsige to the lesser Syrtis; 2 Tripolitana, from the lesser Syrtis to the greater; 3 Numidia, lying on the West of Zengitana, or Africa Propria: and 4 Byzacena, so called from Byzacium, or Byzacina, a chief City of it; the Territory whereof so extremely fruitful, that 400 Ears of Corn were sent to Rome in the time of Augustus, and 360 in the time of Domitianus Nero, growing on one stalk. But this division being long since worn out of memory, it is divided at the present into the Provinces of 1 Ezzab, 2 Tripolit, 3 Tunis, 4 Constantina, 5 Bugla.

1. EZZAB, is that part of this Kingdom which lieth next to Cyrene: A small Region, and not very fruitful; yet the Inhabitants hereof are conceived to be rich, (the richer, in regard they are free from Tributes:) their wealth not rising from the commodities of their own Country, which affordeth them little else besides Dates and Olives; but from such Merchandise which they buy of the Venetians, and sell to the Numidians. The richest, those of Mesrata, (a little Province of this Tract) which lieth near the Sea. Towns it hath some, but none of note: the chief of which, 1 Mesrata, 2 Sibeca, both upon the Sea; of which the first gives name unto that little Province spoken of before. Of more note in the former times was Phileni Villa, situate on the greater Syrtis, near the Promontory then called Hippi, but now Cabo de Sura; memorable for the adjoining Altars, called Phileni Aræ, erected by the Carthaginians upon this occasion. Some controversies being grown betwixt those of Carthage and Cyrene, about their Bounds; it was agreed, that two men at a set hour should be sent out of each City towards the other; and where they met, there to be fixed the Meer-stone of their several Territories. The Phileni, two brothers nominated for Carthage, were so quick of foot, that they had gotten a good way into the Country of the Cyrenenses, before they were met; wherewith the Cyrenenses much enraged, put to them this choice, either to go so much back again, or to die in the place. This last accepted by the Phileni, who preferred the common good of their Country before their own, for preservation of whose name and honour to succeeding Ages, the grateful Carthaginians did erect these Altars.

2. West of the Province of Ezzab, lieth that of TRIPOLIS, which together with Ezzab made that Province which the Romans called Tripolitana. Not much more fruitful than the other, except in Barley; but more commodiously seated in regard of the Sea, which is here more safe for navigation; tion; the former lying wholly on the greater Sirtis. Chief Towns hereof, 1 Leptis Magna, so called, to distinguish it from another, but of less note, and therefore called Leptis Parva, situate in the (now) Province of Tunis. A Town of so great wealth and Trade, that it was worth a Talent daily to the Carthaginians. 2 Euphranta, called also Pyrgos Euphranta, from some strong Tower in it on the Western bank of the greater Sirtis. 3 Ciniferna, on the Eastern side of the River Cyniphus. 4 Calis, the utmost City of this Province Westward; the same which Ptolemy calls Tacapa, situate at the fall of the River Triton into the left-ser Sirtis. 5 Salrath, and 6 Heva; not else observable, but that together with Leptis Magna they made up that one City, which the Romans called from thence Tripolis. 7 Tripolis, founded by the Romans, and by them peopled with Colonies from those three Cities before mentioned. A City of great name and Riches, till destroyed by the Saracens. By whom rebuilt, adorned with many fair Temples, Colleges, and Hospitals; and flourishing in much wealth and Lustre, it became a Kingdom of it self, but subject to the Kings of Tunis, till taken by the Genoes with a Fleet of 20 Sail, and by them sold to the King of Fesse. Recovered not long after by the King of Tunis, came once more to have a King of its own; till by the valour of Peter of Navar, it was conquered for Ferdinand the Catholic, the first Monarch of Spain: whose Nephew Charles the 5. conferred it on the Knights of S. John of Hierusalem, then expelled from Rhodes: whom the Turks under Sinan Bassa General of Selimus the second, dispossessed by force, An. 1551. Since that the ordinary Residence of the Turkish B. glerleg, for these African Provinces; and made an usual retreat for Pirates, who infest these Seas, and do much mischief to the Coasts of Sicily, Italy, and others of the Christian Countries.

Tunis.

3. The Province of TUNIS, lying Westward to that of Tripolis, taketh up so much of this Kingdom, as anciently contained the Province of Bizacena; and so much of the Roman Africa, as lyeth on the East of the River called Gaudihubar, the Hipponites Lacus of the ancient writers. The Country anciently so fruitful, that it yielded usually an increase of an hundred and fifty fold: For proof of which, besides the testimony of approved Authors, the wonderful, if not prodigious Ears of Corn, which before we heard of, may serve sufficiently. Now indigent, and so unprovided of all Grain for the use of their families, that they are fain to furnish themselves out of other places: the people not daring to manure or sow their land, for fear of the Arabians, who ever and anon fall into these parts, and spoil what they meet with.

Places of most note in it, in the elder times, 1 Adrumetum, or Adrumysus, now called Machometta, once a Roman Colony, and the Metropolis of the Province of Byzacena; by consequence, in the times of Christianity, an Archbishop's See: walled and repaired by the Emperour Justinian, and by his command called Justiniana. 2 Zama, the incamping place of Annibal, before his battle with Scipio, and Nadagar, memorable for the great battle, betwixt the two renowned Generals of Rome and Carthage; not parallel'd since their own times, nor in those before them. In which the great Controversie between those Cities being to be tried, the fortune of the day fell unto the Romans: For though Annibal shewed his singular judgment in ordering his Souldiers, as Scipio could not but acknowledge; yet being far the weaker in horse, and by an Order of the Senate of Carthage, constrained to fight in a place of disadvantage, he could do no marvels: the Romans, with the loss of no more than 1500 of their own men, killing 20000 of the Carthaginians, in the fight and chase. 4 Salera the first place took by Scipio, after the landing of his Army. 5 Uica, a Tyrian Colony, beautified with an Haven capable of the greatest ships; much spoke of in the wars of Carthage, and memorable for the death of Cato (hence surnamed Vician) who here slew himself, for fear of falling into the hands of Cesar. It is now called Biserta. 6 Bizacium, seated in a liberal and fruitful soil, as was shewn before; whence the Province had the name of Byzacena. 7 Ruspinum, made by Cesar the seat of his war in Africa, against the Sons and faction of Pompey; as memorable in the times succeeding, for being the Episcopal See of S. Fulgentius. 8 Thysrus, remarkable for the Tragedy of the Gordiani: Of which the Father in this City was saluted Emperour by the Souldiers, in hatred to Maximinus then their Emperour, whose Procurator they had slain in a tumult: but his party being discomfited by Capellianus, whom Maximinus sent against him, and his Son killed in the defeat; upon the hearing of the news, he here hanged himself. 9 Hippagreta, on a great Lake betwixt Carthage and Utica; one of the Towns which held out longest for the Mercenaries, in their desperate Rebellion against the Carthaginians; by which the Estate of that great City was in danger of ruine, at the end of the first Punic war. 10 Carthage, once the Lady and Mistress of Africa, situate in the bottom of a safe and capacious Bay, the entrances whereof were very strongly fortified both by Art and Nature, environed with the Sea, except upon one side only, where joyned unto the Land by a narrow Isthmus, about two miles and an half in breadth. In compass 24 miles, but measuring by the outward wall, it was 45. For without the wall of the City it self, there were three walls more, betwixt each of which there were three or four Streets, with Vaults under ground of thirty foot deep; wherein they had place for 500 Elephants and all their Fodder, with Stables over them for 4000 Horses, and all their Provender, and Lodging in those Out-streets for the Riders of the said Horses, and for 20000 Foot besides, which never came within the City to annoy or pester it. On the South-side stood the Cattle called Byrsa, which took up two miles and an half in compass: first built by Dido, on that ground which she obtained of the Lybians, when she got leave to buy only so much Land of them, as she could compass round about with an Oxes hide. In that, the sumptuous Temple of their ancient Deities, Juno, Apollo, Asculapius, Belus. On the West-side, a standing Pool made of the Sea-water, let into it by so narrow a passage, that there was but 70 foot open for the Sea to enter: On which they had a stately City we have with their Ships and Gallies riding by it. Of the foundation and affairs of this mighty City we have spoke already. The Government of it first by Kings, those absolute enough at first, afterwards limited by the Senate; and finally made merely titular by the power of the people: which unproportionable mixture is much condemned by Aristotle, in the 2 of his Politicks. Their Territories, before the second Carthage.

Punic war, when they were at the greatest, extended on the Sea-coasts of the Mediterranean, from the Greater Syria to the Streits, and so unto the River Iberus, for the space of 2000 miles in length: their Revenues answerable, and readily brought in, by reason of their infinite trading. Which made the Roman people think themselves unsafe, whilst this City stood. Resolved on the destruction of it, they sent against it L. Martius, and M. Manlius, their two Consuls, with a puissant Army: to whom the Carthaginians willingly delivered up their Arms and Shipping, contracting only for the preservation of the City it self, which was faithfully promised. But when they had withal given up the sons of their principal men, to be sent to Rome for Pledges of their future Loyalty; they were told that a City confided not in Walls, but in Laws and Government. These with the Corporation, should remain as formerly; the Town to be removed ten miles further off, where there was no Sea to thrive and grow rich upon. Enraged herewith, it was resolved to abide the utmost: but they wanted necessities for resistance. That want supplied for want of Iron to make Arms, with Gold and Silver; the houses pulled down to furnish them with timber to build a Navy; the noble Ladies cutting off the hair of their heads, to make Ropes and Cordage; 25000 Women lifted to defend the Walls. But the fatal moment being come, a second Scipio is sent thither to disperse the work; by whom at last the Town was taken, and for 17 days together consumed with fire: the Queen and multitudes of the people burning themselves in the Temple of Asculapius, because they would not fall into the hands of the Romans. Redified by Julius Caesar, and made a Colony, it recovered some part of her former lustre; but so, that her chief glory was rather to be sought for in her ancient, than her present fortunes. Populi Romani Coloniae Iulie Imperii ejus pertinax annis, & priorum excidio rerum, quam opes presentium clarior, was her character in the times of Pomponius Mela. But in the last estate, accounted for the Metropolis of the Diocese of Africa, the Residence of the Vicarius or Lieutenant-General, and the See of the chief Primate of the African Churches; who had 164 Bishops under him in that one Province wherein Carthage stood. Destroyed in the succeeding time by the Vandals, and after that by the Saracens; it revived again, and had the reputation of a City of no mean importance, till the year 1270. at what time being forced by the French, under Lewis the 9th. and thereupon deserted by its old Inhabitants, it began to languish, and was at last reduced to nothing but a few scattered houses, not above five and twenty shops, one Temple; all the rest a ruine. So truly said the ancient Poet;

Sic patet exemplis Oppida posse mori.

Thus by examples do we see,

That Towns may die as well as we.

Of chief note at the present, 1 Tunis, supposed to be the Themisa or Thumisa of Ptolemy; of small account till the last destruction of Carthage, by whose fall it rose. Situate not far from the ruins of that famous City, in compass above five miles, and in that compass said to contain 10000 households. Of great traffick, and well frequented by the Merchants of foreign Nations; chiefly from Genoa, and Venice. Remarkable in the Story of the Holy Wars, for the sieges and successes of two of our English Princes; that namely of King Edward the first, in his fathers life time; and that of Henry the fourth, then but Earl of Darby: by both which (though the last served only under the command of the French) the City was compelled to a Composition; Lewis the 9. commonly called S. Lewis, dying at the first siege of it. 2 Goletta, a strong Fort, built for defence of the Haven of Tunis, in a Demy-Island, divided from the main Land by two narrow passages, but so that it commands them both. Taken, but not without extreme difficulty by Charles 5. An. 1535. together with the Turkish Navy riding in the Lake fast by it; but again recovered by the Turks about 40 years after, An. 1574. 3 Cairoan, built by Hucla, who first conquered Africa for the Saracens, in a sandy Delart, about 100 miles from Tunis, and 36 from any part of the Sea, to secure himself from any invasion, which the commodiousness of the Sea might bring upon him. Adorned by the first founder of it, with an admirable Temple raised on Pillars of Marble; who placed also in it a College of Priests, and made it the chief Residence of his posterity for the space of 170 years, who reigned here under the great Caliphs as the Sultans of Africa. Destroyed by the Arabians, in the 424 year of their Hegira, but regained from them by the King of Morocco and still of such esteem amongst these Mahometans, that their chief men are brought thither to be buried from all parts of the Country, hoping by the prayers of those Priests to find a shorter way to Heaven, than in other places.

4. More Westward yet lies the Province named CONSTANTINA, so called from Constantina the chief City of it. Extended from the Lake Hipponites, now named Gaudihubar, to Constantina a Mountain bordering on Bugia, which I conceive to be the same with Mons Audus in Ptolemy. The soil hereof said to be very rich and fruitful both for Corn and Cattel, yielding abundance of fruits, and great store of butter. Rubricatus, by Orosius called Oradus, now Ludog, the chief River of it.

Principal Cities of this Province, 1 Tabraca, on the East; and 2 Hippo Regius, on the Western bank of Rubricatus: both Roman Colonies, but this last most famous, in being the Episcopal See of renowned S. Augustine. 3 Bonni, the birth-place of that Father, built by the Romans about an hundred miles from the Sea; but situate in a large Plain, containing 40 miles in length, 25 in breadth: so rich and fertile, that the Town flourisheth to this day; adorned with a sumptuous Mosque, and never without the company of Merchants coming from Genoa, Tunis, and the Isle of Zerby, for their Fruits and Butter. 4 Thaburnica, another Colony of the Romans. 5 Sicca Veneria, another Town of the same nature; by Solinus called Veneria only, and by Pliny, Sicca. 6 Culcuza, another of the Roman Colonies, by the Moor now called Cucutina, but Constantina by the Latines, and most Nations else, now the chief City of this Province, situate near a Mountain of the same name, near the edge of Bugia. An ancient City, but containing waisted by continual wars. Nor have the people any peculiar Character, but what belongeth to others of these Africans also.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Guagya, inconveniently seated, as paying their accustomed Tributes to the King of Tremesen, their natural Prince; and contribution to the Arabians, who are here so numerous and powerful, that the Kings themselves of this small Kingdom were fain to buy their peace of them at excessive rates. 2 Tigedent, sometimes famous, and abounding with men of learning; now almost forsaken, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of these Arabians. 3 Tebecrit, inhabited for the most part by Weavers. 4 Brekeh, the Inhabitants whereof use to paint a black Cross on their Cheek, and another on the Palm of their hands: the reason of which custom they are ignorant of, but some conceive it to be a remembrance of their Christianity. 5 Ned-Roma, built as the people do pretend, by the ancient Romans, as an Epitome, or Abridgement of that mighty City, to which it is said to have some resemblance; and that imported by the name, which signifieth in their language, Like to Rome. Perhaps the same which Platony calleth Novum oppidum, or the New-Town, then a Roman Colony. 6 Batha, once a great City, since decayed by Wars. 7 Oran, a noted Haven on the Mediterranean, said to contain no fewer than 10000 Families. Powerful at Sea, and much infesting with their Gallies the Coasts of Spain; till taken from Ferdinand the Catholic by Peter of Navar, An. 1506. since which time peopled and possessed by the Spaniards: In vain belied by the said Turks, An. 1562. 8 Masfalgivir, a fair and spacious Haven on the same Sea also, and taken by the said Peter of Navar, about the same time. 9 Hartsgol, in former times of much esteem amongst the Moors; but being destroyed by the King, or Sultan of Caïroan, it bequeathed his greatness unto Tremesen, which after grew into renown. To Tremesen, once adorned with many beautiful Mosques, and five sumptuous Colledges, curiously wrought with Moswick work. So populous, that there were reckoned in it 16000 Families; and so well fortified, that it held out seven years against Joseph the great King of Fesse: not taken after that, though they were very much weakened by Abulthisen, or Albobacen his Son and successor, under a siege of 30 months. By those, and the succeeding troubles it hath undergone, exceedingly impaired both in strength and beauty. More ancient, 11 Siga, an African City, and a Roman Colony; the retiring place of Syphax and Bocchus, sometimes Kings of this Country. 12 Arsenaria, another Colony of the Romans. 13 Jol, the Seat-Royal of King Bocchus, after such time as this Country was conferred upon him by the Romans, on the taking of Jugurth: called afterwards Casura, in honour of Augustus Cæsar, whose Fendatories the Kings hereof were then accounted; or as some say, in honour of Claudius Cæsar, by whom it made a Colony: the Metropolis of it also when a Roman Province, which from hence was called Casuriensis. Situated in, or near the place where Oran now stands, which seemeth to have risen out of the ruins of it. 14 Saldæ, a Roman Colony also, out of whose ruins rose Algiers. 15 Algiers, by the Arabians called Gezir, now the chief City of this Kingdom, situate near the Sea, in the form of a Triangle, with an Haven to it; but neither great, nor safe from the North-winds, which do much annoy it. The buildings very beautiful; the publick Inns, Bathes, and Mosques, exceeding sumptuous; every Trade having a several place, or street by it self. But that which is the greatest grace of it, is the situation of the houses (standing in even streets one above another, upon the rising of a steep Hill; so that the windows of one street, or row of houles do all along overlook the tops of the other next beneath, which yieldeth to the Sea a most pleasant prospect. A City not so large, as strong; and not so strong, as famous. Famous for being the receptacle and retreat-place of the Turkish Pirates, who domineer so infinitely over the Mediterranean, to the great damage of the Merchants of all Nations that frequent those Seas. Famous also for the shipwrack which Charles the fifth here suffered, who besieging this Town, lost in the Haven of it at one Tempest, besides an infinite number of Karvels and small Boats, divers strong Gallies, 140 Ships, a great many excellent pieces of Ordnance; such a number of gallant Horses, that in Spain the race of Horses for service had like to have been lost for ever; and above half his men. It long enjoyed the benefit of proprietary Princes, (but Homagers, or Tributaries to the Kings of Tremesen) till such time as Selimes, and Mahomet, falling out, made the first, and that an irreparable breach in the Government. For Selimes, to strengthen his side, implored the aid of Hairaccius Barbarossa, a noble Pirate; who taking his best advantage, slew the disjoynted brethren, and settled himself in the Kingdom: which he had scarce made warm, when he left it to Hairadine Barbarossa his brother, An. 1514. This Hairadine drove the Spaniards out of Bugia, and was so renowned for Martial prowess, that Solyman the magnificent made him Lord High-Admiral of his Fleet: which Office, when to the prejudice of Christendom he had fortunately and for long time undergone, he died lamented, and made the Turk the Heir of his Kingdom; the Kingdom of Tremesen being made subject to the Turks much about that time. 16 Tetnan, and 17 Sargil, situate Westward of Algiers; Towns of Trade and Piracy.

The old Inhabitants of this Kingdom, when a Roman Province, were the Herpidiani, Taladusi, Thalussi, Malchubii, Maccureli, Chime, and others of as little note; the most predominant Nation being the Masfysli, over whom (and in that over all the rest) reigned Syphax, spoken of before, unfortunately famous for his tragical love to Sophonisba: for whose sake siding with the Carthaginians against the Romans, he was vanquished and sent prisoner to Rome. His Kingdom given to Masfysli, King of the Numidians, continued in his line till the death of Jugurth, and then bestowed upon the Kings of Mauritania; part of whose Kingdom it was reckoned in the following times, till made a Province of the Empire by the Emperour Claudius. Won from the Romans by the Vandals, and then by the Saracens; it followed the fortunes of these last, while they stood and flourished: But growing into many distractions, and every Sultan, or Provincial Governour shifting for himself, it became a Kingdom, under the title and title of the Kingdom of Tremesen. The Majesty of it much impaired by Abulthisen, or Albobacen King of Fesse, who brought it not long after under his command. Recovering after some short time its former liberty, it became a Kingdom once again, and so continued till the time of Abuchemen: who incurring the hatred of his people, because by his supine neglect the Spaniards had surprised and taken Oran and Masfalgivir, their two best Havens, made an easy passage for his brother Anzeiden to the Regal diadem. Abuchemen scarce well settled, lost it to Hairadine Barbarossa, An. 1515. and he to Charles the fifth, by whom Abuchemen was restored, becoming Homager and Tributary to the Crown of Spain. But his successor Abdulla, weary of the Spanish servitude, put himself under the protection of Solyman the magnificent, as a Prince of his own Religion; to whom at his decease, he left the possession of his Kingdom also; ever since subject to the Turks: whose Beglerbeg or Supreme Officer for these African Provinces, resides for the most part in Algiers, and hath 40000 Timariots under his command.

3. FESSE, and 4 MOROCCO.

These Kingdoms I have joyned in title, because united for the most part in the story and affairs thereof, and of late times making but one entire Estate under the Xeriffes of Morocco: and therefore handled both together in the point of History, though of a different consideration in the way of Geography.

They contain in them the whole Country of Mauritania, truly and properly so called; divided anciently into Tingitana, and Stifensis; Cæsariensis being naturally a Numidian Region, the Masfysli and the rest of the Inhabitants of it, of Numidian breed; not laid to Mauritania, nor accompanied any part thereof, till the death of Jugurth; when given to Bocchus King hereof, in reward of his Treason, for betraying that unhappy Prince into the hands of the Romans.

It took this name from the Mauri, the Inhabitants of it, when that name was first given; the word Tania, signifying a Nation, being added to it; as in Britannia, Lusitania, Aquitania, and perhaps some others; and the name of Mauri given them Ab rā Maupā, which signifieth amongst other things obscure or black, by reason of the darkness of their complexion. Accompted in their times, an hardy, but a bloody people; careless of life, fearless of death; implacable, if once offended, their thirst of revenge not to be quenched but by blood. Mauri sunt genus hominum suapte natura cadis avidissimum, nihilque non facile audens, & desperatis similes, contemptu viz. mortis & periculorum. A Character given of them in Herodians time, and it holds good still: notwithstanding the intermixture of Goths and Saracens incorporated into the same Nation with them, and passing by the same name in the Writers of the middle time. Post hæc Mauri totam Hispaniam & Provinciam Burgundiam &c. dominio suo manciparunt, as my Author hath it; where by Moors we are to understand the Saracens, which came out of Africk.

Chief Mountains of this Country, 1 Atlas Minor, so called, to difference it from the greater Mountain of that name, from which it is seven degrees more North, but shooteth, as that doth, with a point or Promontory into the main Atlantick Ocean, on the South of Silla. 2 Durdus, extended also into Cæsariensis. 3 Diur. 4 Phocra, of which little memorable. Rivers of most note, 1 Sala. 2 Sabur. 3 Zilia. 4 Phuik. 5 Diur. 6 Cusa; all falling into the Atlantick: this last the same, as I conjecture, which our modern Writers call Ommirabili. And for the rest, we must find amongst them, 1 Sisfemel, 2 Tensiff, 3 Niffir, the names of the chief Rivers, as at this time called.

The old Inhabitants hereof in the time of the Romans, were the Metagonites near the Straits, giving name unto Metagonitis an adjoining Promontory, the Succosii, Verbica, Nestheres, Vacunta, Voli; and on the East-side the Mauræsii: These last participating of that common name, in which all united. Called by the Latines, Mauri; by the Greeks, Maurusi: The Etymology as before. Their descent originally from Phut, the Son of Cham; whose memory preserved here in the River Phut. To that, the coming of the Chanaanites, of the same extraction, served but as an Accessory. From those two Fountains sprang the whole Nation of the Mauri. Governed by Kings; the most considerable of which, when first known to the Romans, was that Bocchus, who betrayed Jugurth his friend and son in law, into the hands of the Romans: gratified for that Treachery with the Country of the Masfysli, (reckoned for part of Mauritania from that time forwards) as Hirpsal one of his Sons was, not long after, with the Kingdom of Numidia. The whole Estates of Bocchus, Syphax and Masfysli united by this means in the person of Juba, one of his posterity, the most potent Prince of all these parts: who falling in the African War against Julius Cæsar, Numidia was forthwith made a Province of the Roman Empire; Crispus Salustius being made the first Governour of it. But Mauritania, extending at that time from the Ocean to the River Ampfagus, he gave to Bocchus, and Bogud, two of his Confederates, but descended of the old Regal family. Bogud unluckily taking part with Mark Antony against Augustus, was by Bocchus, who declared for the other side, dispossessed of his part, (that which now makes the Kingdom of Fesse) in which confirmed for his good service, by the conquering Emperour. Juba, the Son of the former Juba, grown famous for his eminent learning, was of a Prisoner made a Prince: invested after the death of Bocchus in all the Dominions of his father, except Numidia: and by the bounty of Augustus, a great Patron of Learning, advanced to the marriage of Selene, daughter of Antony and Cleopatra. After whose death, and the death of Polomy their Son, murdered by Caligula, Mauritania was by Claudius added to the Patrimony of the Roman Empire: divided into two Provinces, viz. Cæsariensis, betwixt the two Rivers Malva and Ampfagus, now the Kingdom of Tremesen; and Tingitana, from the River Malva to the Western Ocean. This last divided into Tingitana, and Stifensis, (the River now called Ommirabili being the boundary betwixt them) by the Emperour Constantine: who leaving Stifensis to the Diocess of Africk, laid Tingitana (why I know not) unto that of Spain. Gained from the Romans by the Goths, after by the Saracens, they became Members of those Empires; in the declining

7. More East, betwixt Hafscora and the River Malva, is the Province of T E D L E S, bounded on the East, with the Kingdom of Tremesen; and on the North, with that of Feffr, from which last parted by the River with three Colledges, many Baths, and Hospitals, and some beautiful Temples; one of them larger, though not fairer than that of Fesse; in both Towns men of the same Trade have a street by themselves, for greatness, wealth, and numbers of people, esteemed the third City of this Kingdom. 3 Dubdu, an ancient Town, but not much observable. 4 Turrit, seated on the top of an Hill, in the midst of a plain, but compassed about with Deserts. 5 Beni Jessiten, neighboured by Iron Mines, in which their greatest bravery and wealth consisteth: the women here wearing Iron-rings for ornaments to their Ears and Fingers. 6 Tezergui, subject to the Arabians. 7 Adaggia, the most Eastern Town of all the Region; situate in a Peninsula, made by the confluences of Muliso and Miloua. In this Country is the head of the River Subur, which rising out of a great Lake in the woods of the Mountain Seligus, and receiving many lesser waters, with a large and navigable stream falleth into the Ocean.

4. Northwards of Chaus lieth the Region called GARET, extended thence as far as the Mediterranean; and reaching East and West, from the River Malva, where it bordereth on Tremesin, to that of Nuchor, where it toucheth on Errif, and Afgara. The length hereof 25 Leagues, the breadth but twenty. The soil in most places dry and desert, like the Sands of Numidia: especially all along the banks of the Malva; near unto which from the Mediterranean to Chaus, it is wholly desert and unpeopled, nor well inhabited in the most fruitful parts of it, being full of Mountains; the worse for the ill neighbourhood of the Spaniards, possessed of 1 Chefusa, and 2 Medela, two chief Towns hereof. 3 Pannon de Peles, by some called Felez de Gomera, situate on the shore of the Mediterranean, betwixt two high Mountains; built by the Africans or Goths; but now in the possession of the Spaniards also. 4 Jafferis, situate on the Sea also, founded by the Mahometans of the Marine Family, 5 Tezzoras, standing on an Hill, to which there is but one passage only.

5. Weltward of Garet lieth ASGAR, extended from thence unto the Ocean: Shut up on the South East-side with the great Mountains Zalaga, Zaron, and Gomara, out of which last runneth the River Lucus, called Lix by Ptolomy. The Aire hereof very temperate, and the soil as fertile; supplying with the over-plus of its Commodities, the Mountainous parts of Fesse, and the deserts of Garet. Once full of Towns, till ruined and destroyed by the wars. A Monument whereof, 1 Gimma, built by the ancient Africans, of which remains nothing but the Ditches. 2 Larache, in Latine Larisse, the Lixa of Ptolomy, situate at the mouth of the Lix or Lucus, and furnished with a good Port, but of difficult entrance; garrisoned when possessed by the Moors with 300 light horse, and 300 Harcenziers; but better fortified than before, since possessed by the Spaniards, into whose hands it was put by Muley-Shek, king of Morocco and Fesse, when worsted by Muley Sidan his younger Brother, in the beginning of the civil Wars betwixt them. 3 Chsar Elcabir, given by Almanfor to a poor Fisher, who had entertained him unknown, one night in his Cottage, when he lost his Company in Hunting: Adorned with many Temples, one Colledge of Students, and a stately Hospital.

6. On the North of Afgara is the Province of EL-HABAT, or HABAT coasting along the Atlantic Ocean to the mouth of the Streits, in length 100 miles, about 80 in breadth. The Country very plentiful of all manner of necessaries, and very well Peopled; the Mountains which are here of a great height, being well inhabited. In former times replenished with many Cities, both of the Foundation of the Goths, Romans, and old African Moors, now much diminished by the Wars. Those of most note, 1 Ezaggan, the Inhabitants whereof by an ancient privilege granted by the Kings of Fesse, were licenced to drink wine, though prohibited by the Law of Mahomet. Situate on a Mountain near the River Guargu, about 35 leagues from Fesse; and garrisoned with 400 horse for fear of the Portugals, who sometimes make their excursions thither. 2 Bafra, once a walled Town, and the walls still standing, but very little or no Town in them. 3 Homur, sometimes well peopled, but now little inhabited, by reason of the ill neighbourhood of the Portugals, who command that Coast. 4 Banirendo, in a manner deserted for the same reason. 5 Alcazar, to distinguish it from another of this name, called Alcazar Guer, taken together with Arzilla and Tangier by Alonso the fifth of Portugal, Anno 1470. Nigh to which Town the three Kings, Sebastain of Portugal, Mahomet, and Abdemelech, Competitors for this Kingdom, were slain in a day. There was also slain at the same time, the great English Rebel Stuckley, who fled out of Ireland to Rome, Anno 1570. Where he was lovingly entertained by the Pope then being, as a good Son of the Church: by whom appointed for the Conquest of Ireland, and for that end furnished with 800 Souldiers paid by the King of Spain; and by his Holiness created Marquis of Leinster, Earl of Wexford and Caterlogh, Viscount of Marragh, and Baron of Rosse. Thus furnished, he began his journey towards Ireland, Anno 1578. but hearing of these Wars, and desirous to make a party in them, he lost all his honour with his life. 6 Arzilla a Sea-town, 70 miles distant from the Streits, now possessed by the Portugals. 7 Tanger, a great Town, and very ancient, distant from the Streits about 30 miles, belonging to the Portugals also. In former times it was called Tingis, a Colony of the Canaanites, and by them built at their first coming thither, when they fled from the Sword of Josuah; testified by the two Pillars erected near this City, which before we spoke of: and from that name caused all this part of Mauritania to be called Tingitana. Made afterwards a Colony by the Emperor Cladius, who named it Traducta Julia; but the old name prevailed, and out lived the new. Near to this Town it is said that Hercules overcame Anteus, a monstrous Giant of 64 Cubits high, as his Legend telleth us. And not far off was an high Mountain called Abyla, opposite to which in the Coast of Spain, was another called Calpe, on which the said Hercules placed his so famous Pillars. 8 Septa, or Senia, situate on, or near that Mountain, unfortunately memorable for giving the title of an Earle to Julian, who first brought the Saracens into Spain; beautified in the following times with many Temples, Colledges, and Learned men: taken by the Portugals with the help of the English, An. 1415. and now in the possession of the King of Spain. The only Town of all the Estates of Portugal, which in the late revolt revolt of that Kingdom doth remain unto him. 9 Julia Constantia, so called, and made a Roman Colony, by Augustus Cesar. 10 Laxia, a Roman Colony of the Plantation of Cladius, in old times said to have been the Court, or Palace of the Giant Anteus. Not far from whence (that Anteus might not dwell alone) the old Geographers have placed the habitation of Gerion, as proper a Gentleman as himself, in a small Island of the Streits, called Gerionis Insula, and by some Erythia.

7. Eastward of Habat is the Province of E R R I F, extended from the mouth of the Streits, where it joyneth to Habat, as far as to the River Nochor (supposed to be the Molochub of the Ancient Writers) by which parted from Garet: A mountainous and cold Country in respect of the rest of Barbary, full of Woods and Forrests; but plentiful enough of Vines, Figs, and Olives; and not without some herds of Goats, though otherwise not well stored with Cattel. In length 140 miles, in breadth 40 only; inhabited by a race of valiant men, but excessive Drunkards. The Towns hereof not many, though full of Villages; The chief of which, 1 Mazagon, near unto the Streits; a very strong Town, and of great importance, but possessed by the Portugals: in vain besieged by Abdalla the first, with an Army of 200000 men, An. 1562. 2 Mezeem, seated on a Mountain. 3 Beni-Jirso, of like situation, once beautified with a goodly Colledge for the Professors of the Mahometan Law, who here publicly taught it, as in a University; the Inhabitants whereof were in that regard freed from all exactions. Destroyed together with the Library of it, by some wicked Tyrant, An. 1509. the Books therein being valued at 4000 Ducats. 4 Terga, 5 Togassa. 6 Gelbe; of which little memorable.

Thus having looked over the particular Provinces of these two Kingdoms, we must next look upon them also in the general story, from the time of the Saracenic conquest; First let into this Country by the Treason of Julian, and for a while subject to the great Caliph, or Successor of Mahomet: afterwards to the King, or Caliph, of Cairoan, who extended his Empire to the Ocean. But that Kingdom being overthrown by the coming in of the Arabians, these Provinces with the rest were afflicted by them; till the rising of the Kingdom of Fes: begun in the person of Idris, of the blood of Mahomet, by Hali, and his daughter Fatima; commonly called the Family of Alaweci; who persecuted by the opposite faction, fled into Mauritania; where he grew into such reputation, that in short time he got both Swords into his hands. Dying about the 185 year of the Hegira, he left his power unto his son, of the same name with his Father, the first founder of Fesse. Opposite whereunto on the other side of the water, one of his sons (but his name I find not) built another City, which in time grew into emulation with it; and raising by that means a faction in the house of Idris, which occasioned the subversion of the Kingdom of Fesse, after it had continued in the Family of the Alaweci, for the space of 270 years. The estate hereof first weakened by Abu Tefin, or Tevifin, of the house of the Almoravides, or Lantunes, and so weakened, that he thereby gave an opportunity to Joseph Abu Tefin, or Telephine, his son and Successor; then famous for bridling the Arabians, and founding the City of Morocco, to suppress that Family: Who killing the Princes of that line, and 30000 of their subjects, brake down the walls which parted the two Cities from one another, united them by bridges, and so made them one. Drawn into Spain by the dissention of the Saracens there amongst themselves, he added all which they held in that Kingdom, unto his Dominions: held by his Successors, as long as they were able to hold Morocco: the Catalogue of which Princes, called the house, or Family of the Almoravides, with that of the Race of the Almohades, is this which followeth.

The Kings, or Miramomolims of MOROCCO.

A. Ch.
1068

- 1 Tefin, Tevifin, or Telephine, the first of the Almoravides, that reigned in Africk.
- 2 Joseph, surnamed Telepinus, the son of Tefin, founded Morocco, subdued the Kingdom of Fesse; and added the Estate of the Moors in Spain unto his Dominions, An. 1091.
- 3 Hali, the son of Joseph.
- 4 Abu-Hali, the son of Hali, supposed to be the publisher of the works now extant in the name of Avicenne, compiled at his command by some of the most learned Arabian Doctors: vanquished and slain by.
- 5 Addelmou, or Abdel-Mumen, the first of the Almohades; of obscure parentage, but raised to so great power by the practises of Almohad a juggling Prophet of those times, that he overthrew the King, and obtained the Kingdom of the Almoravides both in Spain and Africk, An. 1150. to which he also added the Realm of Tunis and Cairoan.
- 6 Joseph II. or Aben-Joseph, the son of Abdelmou.

- 7 Jacob, or Aben-Jacob, surnamed Almonfor, a puissant and prudent Prince, of whom much before: son of Joseph II.
- 8 Mahomet, surnamed Enaser, or the Green, the brother of Almanfor. Discomfited by the Christians of Spain, at the battle of Sierra Morena, An. 1214. lost his dominions, there being slain in this battle 200000 of the Moors, as some Writers say; who add, that the Spaniards for two dayes together burnt no other fewer but the Pikes, Lances, and Arrows of their slaughtered Enemies, yet could not consume the one half of them.
- 9 Caid Arrax, Nephew of Mahomet Enaser, by his son Buxaf: slain at the siege of Tremezir, a Castle of Tremesin, which was held against him.
- 10 Amorcad, a kinsman of Caid Arrax, outed of his Estate, and slain by Budebuz, of the same house of the Almohades.
- 11 Budebuz, the last of the house of the Almohades, settled in this estate by the aid and valour of Jacob Aben-Joseph the new King of from the one Sea to the other : and so commanding both the Havens. Built since the departure of the Turks, impregnable fortified, and called thus by the name of Valetta the great Master, who so gallantly repulsed their fury. In this Town the great Master hath his Palace, and the Knights their several Alberges or Seminaries; all very fair and handsome buildings. 4 Burgo, a little Town or City on another Lamoret, lying in the Eastern Haven, at the extremity of which Promontory in a Demy Island stands the great Castle of S. Angelo, built on a Rock, opposite to Valetta, on the other side of the Haven; and strong impregnable by the Turks, who in vain besieged it. 6 Isola a small City and better deserving by name of a Town, situate in another Promontory, on the South of the other, defended on the Westside by a strong Platform, at the point of the Foreland; and on the Eastside, by the impregnable Castle of S. Michael; in vain assaulted by the Turks, who on their ill success at the Siege hereof, gave over the enterprize, and failed home.

The people of this Island originally were a Tyrian or Phœnician Colony, but intermixt in tract of time with some Greek Plantations, coming hither out of Sicily, as before was said. For the most part dependant on the Fortures of Carthage, afterwards of Rome, till subdued by the Saracens: By the Spaniards taken from the *Moor*s, and by Charles the first given to the Knights of the Rhodes, not long before expelled thence by Solyman the Magnificent, An. 1522. These Knights are in number 1000; of whom 500 are always to be resident in the Island. The other 500 are dispersed through Christendom, at their several Seminaries, in France, Spain, Italy, and Germany; and at any summons, are to make their personal appearance. These Seminaries (Alberges they call them) are in number seven, viz. one of France in general, one of Auvergne, one of Provence, one of Castile, one of Aragon, one of Italy, and one of Germany; over every one of which they have a Grand Prior, who in the Country where he liveth; is of great reputation. An eighth Seminary they had in England, till the suppression of it by Henry the 8th. Concerning yet they have some one or other, to whom they give the title of Grand Prior of England. Concerning the original and riches of these Knights, we have spoken when we were in Palestine; now a word or two only of their places, and the election of their great Master. None are admitted into the Order, but such as can bring a testimony of their Gentry for six descents: and when the Ceremonies of their admission (which are many) are performed, they swear to defend the Church of Rome, to obey their Superiors, to live upon the Revenues of their Order, only, and withal to live chastly. Of these there be 16 of great authority (Councillours of State we may fitly call them) called the Great Crosses: out of whom the Officers of the Order, as the Marshal, the Admiral, the Chancellor, &c. are chosen: and who, together with the Master, punish such as are convicted of any crime, 1. by degrading him, 2ly by strangling him; and 3ly, by throwing him into the Sea. Now when the Great Master is dead, they suffer no Vessel to go out of this Island till another be elected, lest the Pope should intrude on their election; which is performed in this manner. The several Seminaries nominate two Knights, and two also are nominated for the English: these 16 from amongst themselves choose eight; these eight choose a Knight, a Priest, and a Friar-servant; and they three, out of the 16 Great Crosses, elect the great Master. The great Master being thus chosen, is stiled (though but a Friar) The most illustrious, and most reverend Prince, the Lord Friar N. N. Great Master of the Hospital of S. John of Jerusalem, Prince of Malta, Gaules, and Goza. Far different I assure you, from that of the first Masters of this Order, who called themselves only Servants to the poor Servitors of the Hospital of Jerusalem; or that of the Master of the Temple, who was only intituled The humble Minister of the poor Knights of the Temple.

This Island is conceived to yield to the great Master the yearly rent of 10000 Ducats, the greatest part whereof ariseth out of Cotten-wool: besides which, he hath towards the maintaining of his Estate, the tenth part of the prizes which are won from the Turks; and certain thousands of Crowns yearly out of the treasure of the Order, which is great and rich; and one of the best Commanderies in every Nation. And for the scowring of the Seas, and securing their Harbours, they have many good Gallies, each of them able to contain 500 Souldiers, and to carry 16 pieces of Ordinance, with which they make excursions many times to the coasts of Greece.

And so much for BARBARY.

MOUNT ATLAS.

IN our way from Barbary to Lybia Interior, we must pass over Mount Atlas, a ridge of hills, of exceeding great height, and of no small length. So high that the top, or Summit of it is above the Clouds, at least so high that the eye of man is not able to discern the top of it. Extat in hoc Mari mons cui nomen Atlas (saith Herodotus) ita sublimis, ut ad illius verticem oculi mortalium pervenire non possint. Yet notwithstanding, it is always covered with Snow in the heats of summer. Difficult of ascent by reason of the sharp and craggy precipices, which occur in many places of it; the rest where plainer, and more even, of such wondrous steepness, that the precipices of the Rocks seem the safer way. Full of thick Woods, and yielding to the Countries on the North-side of it, the greatest part of the Rivers, which refresh and moisten them: and where it bordereth on the proper, or Roman Africa, of such self-fertility, that it affordeth excellent fruits of its natural growth, not planted, grafted, or inoculated by the hand of man. The beginning of it is on the shores of the Western Seas, which from hence have the name of the Atlantick Ocean; in the 26 Degree, and 30 Minutes of the Northern Latitude: and passing on directly Eastward, draw near unto the borders of Egypt, part of Marmarica, or the Roman Lybia, only interposing. It is now called Anchisa, and Montes Clari: And took the name of Atlas from Atlas King of Mauritania, who dwelt at the bottom of this Mountain; famed by the Poets to be turned into this hill by Perseus, and the head of Medusa. Of the daughters of this King, their golden fruit, and the famous Gardens of the Hesperides, we have spoke already; though some remove the place of their habitation more into the West (then by us disposed of) and others into certain Islands of the Western Ocean, which we shall meet withal hereafter. He was said to have been a man of such wondrous height, that the Heavens rested on his shoulders; of which, when weary, he discharged his burden on the shoulders of Hercules; the ground of the fiction either taken from the height of the Mountain, the top whereof seemeth to touch the sky; or from his extraordinary knowledge in Astronomy (as the times then were) whereby he came to be acquainted with the motions of the Stars and Planets; In which knowledge he instructed Hercules, when he came unto him. But for the more Authentick description of it, take it thus from Virgil;

— Jamq, volans apicem & latera ardua cernis
Atlantis auri, Calum qui vertice fulcit.
Atlantis, cinctum assidue cui nubibus atris
Piniferum caput, & vento pulsatur & imbr.
Nix humeros infusa tegit, tum flamina mento
Præcipiant senis, & glacie riget horrida barba.

Which may be Englished in these words:

Then flying, he the top and sides descries
Of Atlas, whose proud head supports the skies.
Atlas, whose Piny head with Clouds inclosed
Is to the storms of winde and rain exposed.
Now hides the Snow his Arms, now tumbleth down Upon his Chin; his Beard with ice ore-grown.

OF LYBIA INTERIOR.

LYBIA INTERIOR is bounded on the North, with Mount Atlas, by which parted from Barbary, and Cyrenaitica; on the East, with Lybia Marmarica, interposed betwixt it and Egypt; and part of Aethiopia Superior, or the Habassine Empire; on the South with Aethiopia Inferior, and the Land of the Negroes; and on the West with the main Atlantick Ocean.

The reason of the name we have seen before, given to this Country in regard of its contiguoness and resemblance to the other Lybia; or else because descended from the Children of Lechaim, by which that Country was first planted. For of King Lybs, or Queen Lybia (the daughter of Euphrates, and Cassiopea) and other the like fictions of the Greeks, I shall take no notice. Distinguished from the other, by the addition of Interior, as lying more within the main land of Africa, the other being partly a Martine Country.

Of the nature of the soyl and people we shall speak anon, when we come to take a view of its several parts. Look we now on it as it stood in the time of the Romans: when, though not so well travelled, or discovered as in these last times: yet have we more particulars of it, as to the names and situation of the Rivers, Mountains, and chief Towns; than any of our later Writers have presented to us. The Rivers of most note, 1 Salathus, 2 Chusurus, 3 Ophiodus, 4 Noius, 5 Musis, 6 Sobus, 7 Doradus. 8 Stachiris, and 9 Masticholus; all of them paying tribute to the Western, or Atlantick Ocean. Mountains of most note. 1 Mandrus, out of which floweth the River Salathus; 2 Sagapola, which gives being to the River Sobus. 3 Rysadins, from whence Stachiris. 4 the Mountain called Deorum Currus (of

of are very courteous to strangers, whom they entertain at free cost; and choose rather to marry their daughters to them, than to any of the Natives. 5 Eboacah, the most Eastern Town in all this Country, distant about 100 miles from the borders of Egypt. 6 Debris, one of the chief Cities of the Garamantes, of great renown in former times for the Wells or Fountains of the Sun. The waters whereof being lukewarm at the Sun-rising, cooled more and more till noon, was then very cold, and so continued until midnight; afterwards by degrees growing hotter and hotter; as if it had a natural Antipathy with the Sun, hottest when that was furthest off: and cold when nearest. 7 Masueba, seated on a Rock, garrisoned by Jugurth for a place of refuge, but taken by Marius, in the prosecution of that War. 8 Caspa, the chief City of all this tract, said to be built by Hercules; but questionless of very great strength, angustus arcis and nisque vallatus, made inaccessible (saith the Historian) by the thick Sands, and multitudes of Serpents which were harboured in them; but easily forced by Marius in his Wars with Jugurth, and utterly destroyed by Cesar in his war against Juba.

It seems by this, that those people neighbouring Mount Atlas, were much at the disposal of the Kings of Mauritania, in the times foregoing; and so they have been also in these latter times. For though neglected by the Romans, who thought it an high point of wisdom not to extend their Empire beyond that Mountain; yet the Saracens had not long possessed themselves of those parts of Barbary, which was in the year 698; but within twelve years (An. 710.) they subdued this Country, and planted their Religion in it, though not themselves. Nor was Amet, the first Xeriff of Morocco warm in that estate, when he thought it best for him to secure himself in it by the conquest of this: to whose successors, the chiefs of the Tribes of hereof render some acknowledgements.

2. LYBIA DESERTA.

LYBIA DESERTA, is bounded on the North with Numidia, or Biledulgerid, to which contiguous; on the East, with Nubia, a Kingdom and Province of the Land of Negroes; on the South, with the land of Negroes wholly; and on the West, with Gualata, another Province of these Negroes interposed betwixt it and the Atlantick.

The reason of the name of Lybia we have had before. To which Deserta was added upon very good reasons, as well to difference it from the other Lybia, a Province of Egypt, as to express the barren and sandy condition of it: in which respect by the Arabians called Sarra, signifying in their language a rude and inhabitable Desert, as this Country is. So truly such, that men may travel in it eight days together without finding water, or seeing any trees and no grass at all. The water which they have is drawn out of pits, exceeding brackish; and many times those pits so covered with the Sands, that men die for thirst: the Merchants therefore carrying their water with them on the backs of Camels; which if it fail, they kill their Camels, and drink a water which they wring out of their guts. And yet as dangerous and uncomfortable as these Deserts be, they are very much travelled by the Merchants of Fesse, and Tremesen, trading to Agades and Tombutum, in the land of Negroes.

The People differ not much from the Numidians in shape or qualities; but if a worse of quality, it must be the Lybian. They did once worship a God called Psaphon, who when he lived, taught divers Birds which he caught, and then set at liberty, to say these words, viz. Psaphon is a great God: which the simple people hearing, and admiring at it, afforded him Divine honours. Converted at last to the Christian Faith, they remained a while in the profession of the Gospel: exterminated by the Saracens about the year 710, who having added Numidia or Biledulgerid to their former conquests, planted their Superstitions in this Country also.

This Country is divided (as others into Provinces) into five great Deserts, to which those of less note are to be referred.

1. ZANHAGA, beginning at the borders of Gualata, (interposed betwixt it and the Atlantick Ocean) and extending Eastward to the Salt-pits of Tegaza; having on the South, Gualata and Tombutum in the land of Negroes; so destitute of water, that there is one pit only at the end of each hundred mile, brackish and unwholesome; and in the Deserts of Azaad and Ariouan, which are parts of this, but one in an 150 or 200 miles riding.

2. ZUENZIGA, extended from the Salt-pits of Tegaza Eastward, to the Desert of Targa: bounded on the North, with Segelmesse, and Tibellati, Numidian Provinces; and on the South, with the Deserts of Ghir and Guber. So void of water, (especially in that part thereof which is called Goguden) that in nine dayes travel there is not so much as one drop to be seen, but what they carry on their Camels.

3. TARGA, extended Eastward to the Desert of Ighidi; and reaching from Tegorwin in the North, to the Desert of Agdez in the South: the best conditioned part of all this Countrey, well watered, of a temperate Air, and a soil reasonably fruitful. In length from North to South 300 miles; and liberally stored with Manna, which they gather into little Vessels, and carry to Agdez to sell. Mingled in water or with portage it is very cooling; and drank of in their Feasts, as a special dainty.

4. LEMBTA, extendeth from the Deserts of Ighidi, unto that of Bordea.

5. BORDEA, which reacheth to the borders of Nubia. Of these two there is little to be said in general, but that this last was discovered lately by one Hamar, a guide to a Caravan of Merchants; who blinded with the Sands wandered out of his way, and causing sand to be given him at every twenty miles end, found by the smell at last that they begun to draw nigh some inhabited Place; and told them of it forty miles before they came to it.

Cities

serta.

Cities of note we hope for none, where we finde no water. Of such as go for Cities here, the most considerable, 1 Tegaza, rich in veins of Salt, resembling Marble; which the Inhabitants, being twenty days distant from any habitation, and consequently many times in danger to die for famine, exchange Victuals with the Merchants of Tombutum, who come thither for it. Much troubled with the South wind, which doth so drive the sands upon them, that it causeth many of them to lose their sight. 2 Huaden, or Hoden, a known resting place, and a great refreshment to the Merchants in the midst of these Deserts. 3 Gualata on the brink of a Lake, fed by a River of hot water; affirmed to be a Town of elegant building, and inhabited by a wealthy people. 4 Toberanm, of little note, but that it serveth for a Stage or halting-place to the weary Traveller. Of which kind there are said to be others at the extremities or ends of each several Desert; the Havens of such men as sail in these sandy Seas, but not else observable.

Nor is there much, if any thing, observable of them in the way of Story, but that not looked after by any of the great Conquerors, either Greeks or Romans, much of the Country was possessed by Arabian Colonies (men fit enough to plant in such barbarous Nations:) at such time as the Saracens planted their Religion here. The Government of the Country since, as it was before, by the Chiefs of their several Clans, or Families, who as they know no Law themselves, so do the people shew as much ignorance of it in their lives and actions, differing but little from brute Beasts more than in shape and speech.

And so much for LYBIA INTERIOR.

OF

TERRA NIGRITARUM.

ERR A NIGRITARUM, or THE LAND OF NEGROES, is bounded on the East, with Aethiopia Superior; on the West, with the Atlantick Ocean; on the North with Lybia Deserta; and on the South, with the Aethiopic Ocean, and part of Aethiopia Inferior. So called from the Nigritæ, the chief of the Nations here inhabiting in the time of Ptolomy: and they so named from the River Niger, of which more anon.

The Country very hot by reason of its situation under the Torrid Zone; yet very well inhabited, full of people, and in some places always green: well watered, and exceeding fruitful, specially in those parts which lie within the compass of the overflowsings of the River Niger; and on the further side of the River Savanna: abundantly well stored both with Corn, Cattel, and Garden-ware for the use of their Kitchins; well Wooded, and those Woods well furnished with Elephants and other Beasts, both wild and tame. Their greatest wants (but such a want as may be born with) is the want of Fruit-trees; few of which they have; and those they have, bear one kind of fruit only, which is like the Chestnut, but somewhat bitterer. Rain here doth neither hurt nor help; their greatest welfare consisting in the over-flowsings of Niger; as that of Egypt in the inundations of Nile. In some parts liberally enriched with Mines both of Gold and Silver, very fine and pure: so that had not the Portugals affected the honour of discovering New Worlds as much as Wealth; they might have made as rich a Factory here, as at the Indies.

The Inhabitants till the coming of the Portugals thither, were for the most part so rude and barbarous, that they seem to want that use of Reason which is peculiar unto man; of little wit, and destitute of all Arts and Sciences; prone to luxury, and for the greatest part Idolaters, though not without some small admixture of Mahometans. When the Portugals first sailed into these Coasts, the People hereof took the Ships for great Birds with white wings; and after, upon better acquaintance, they could not be brought to believe, but that the Eyes which were usually painted on the beaks of the ships, were the eyes by which they saw how to direct themselves in their course. Guns seemed to them, for their hideous noise, to be the work of the Devil; and for Bag-pipes, they took them to be living creatures; neither when they had been permitted to feel them, would they be perswaded but that they were the work of Gods own hands. The very Nobles (if so noble a name may without offence be given to such blackish people) are so dull and stupid, that they are ignorant of all things which belong to civil society: and yet so reverent of their King, that when they are in his presence, they never look him in the face, but sit flat on their buttock, with their elbows on their knees, and their hands on their faces. They use to anoint their hair with fat of Fishes, which makes them stink more wretchedly than they would do otherwise. Of complexion they are for the most part Cole-black, whence the name of Negroes; but on the South-side of the River Senaga, they are only Tawny; which the Blacks so much in love with their own complexion, that they use to paint the Devil white; which I find thus verified.

*The Land of Negroes is not far from thence,
Nearer extended to th' Atlantick Main;
Wherein the black Prince keeps his residence,
Attended by his jetty coloured Train:
Who in their native beauty soft delight,
And in contempt doth paint the Devil white.*

They have tried all Religions, but agree in none. Idolaters at the first, as others the Descendants of Cham: Afterwards it is said they received the Rites and Religion of the Jews, (but the time and occasion of it I do no where find); in which they continued very long: But that being worn out at the last, Christianity prevailed in some Kingdoms of it. In the year 973. Mahometism began to get ground amongst them, by the diligence and zeal of some of the Preachers of that Law: the first who were seduced that way being those of Meli; after which Tombuto, and then Gualata, were infected with the same poyson also. In the end, all the rest of this Country followed their example, except the Kingdom of Borneo, some part of Nubia, and the Coasts of the Atlantic Ocean, which continue in their ancient Gentilism: Christianity being confined to a corner of Nubia (if still there remaining) and some few Garrisons belonging to the Crown of Portugal. And as they are of different Religions, so are they also of several Languages: those of Gualata, Guinea, Tombutum, Meli, and Gungoti, speaking the Language called Sungui; the Gulerioi, Canoter, Cheseña, and Gangreter, &c. that called Guber: Gualata, a language of its own: and those of Nubia, one resembling the Arabic, Chaldaean, and Egyptian.

Mountains of most note in it, in the former times, were those of 1 Arualtes, and 2 Arangu, and 3 that called Deoram curru; this last supposed to be the same which is now called Punta de Lopes Gonfalez, but that more probably, which they now call Cabo de Sierra Leona, a large Prasmonitory, thrusting thrusting it self into the Sea; discerned afar off by the Sailor and the Country people, as well by reason of his height, teaching to the clouds, as the continual lightnings and thunders which do issue thence.

Rivers of most note, besides Nile, which watereth it on the East, is Senaga, or Canaga, which riseth out of the Lake of Gunga, supposed to be the same which Ptolemy calleth Lacum-Cheloniadem. And if so, then must this be the River Giris of which he saith that having fallen into that Lake and there swallowed up, is thence produced another River, whose name he telleth not; little inferior unto Nyba, for the length of its course, the variety of strange creatures which are bred therein, or the distinction which it maketh in the face of this Country: the people on the one side of it being Black, on the other Tawny; the soil on the one side very barren, on the other fruitful. In the end having run his race, he falleth into the Atlantic by two great Out-lets: the Niger, a River better known to Ptolemy by name than nature; now found to have its rise from a great Lake, within two degrees of the Equinoctial; whence running Northwards for a time, he hideth himself under ground for the space of 60 miles together; when rising up again, and making a great Lake, called the Lake of Borno, the bendeth his course directly Westward; and taking in many less Channels, he reacheth the earth into many Islands, and at last falleth into the Sea. Of as long course, and the same wondrous nature as the River Nilus. For from the fifteenth day of June it overfloweth all the adjacent fields, the space of 40 days together; and in so many more, recolletheth his waters into their proper channels: the whole Country being indebted to these inundations for its fertility, which otherwise could be but small, (since the drinels of the soil can afford no exhalations, whereby clouds may be generated, and the earth refreshed with moistures, or revived with dews.

Chief Cities of this Country in the time of Prolomy. 1 Nigira, the Metropolis of the Country, 2 Panagra, 3 Malacath, 4 Anyath, 5 Thomnodacana, 6 Saluce, and others to the number of 17 in all; situate all along the course of the River Niger: Of all which we have nothing now remaining but the situation and the names, which that Author giveth us. So that the memory of all the ancient Towns and People being quite defaced; we must look upon it now as it standeth divided at this time into several Kingdoms, as at the least in all, (some say many more) the chief of which are these that follow.

2. ORA ANTEROSA, a largetract of ground on the Western Ocean, extended from Cape Blanco to the River Carnaga, sandy and barren, but reasonably well peopled. The Inhabitants hereof called Azanaghi, were accounted formerly very rude and barbarous; much civilized since the Portugals and other Christian Nations began to trade there; of middle stature, complexioned between black and ash colour; great liars, very treacherous, poor and parsimonious, and very patient in extremis both of heat and hunger. The chief Towns, 1 Porto do Dio (we may call it Gods Port), and 2 Porto do Riscatto, two frequented Havens, thus named occasionally by the Portuguese, at their first coming thither. 3 Arguin, a strong Fortrefs of the Portugals, situate on or near the Promontory now called Cape Blanco; and giving name unto some Islands, five or six in number, lying near unto it, called the Isles of Arguin; inhabited by a barbarous people, named the Azanahays, but of no great note. These coasts discovered first by the Portugals, Anno 1482. under the conduct of Prince Henry, son of John the first; or by his encouragement and directions.

² QUALATA, distant from the Ocean 100 miles, (the Province of Ora Antiochia being interposed) is but a small Country, though a Kingdom; containing in it but three Burrough-Towns, with some Territories of ground and petty Hamlets belonging to them. Fruitful only in Dates, Mill, and Pulse; but of these two last no great abundance. The Inhabitants Cole-black, hospitable towards strangers to their power, but poor and miserable; without Laws, settled form of Government, Gentry and Judges.

3 AGADEZ, bordering on Targa, one of the five Deserts of Lybia; the people of it generally given to grazing, their houses made of green boughs, which upon every change of Pasture they carry with them. So that we are to look for few Towns among them, but these moveable Villages. One of good note it hath, called Agadez, by the name of the Country, inhabited for the most part by Merchants Strangers, who drive a great Trade betwixt this and Tremesen. The Town well walled, the houses of a better building than the Country promiseth; the people civiller, and more fair conditioned than the rest of the Negroes, seated commodiously on a River which falleth into the Senaga, and by that means hath correspondence with the Ocean also. The King hereof a Tributary to the King of Tombuto, payeth him 15000 Crowns of Annual Tribute.

4 CANO, a large Province on this side of the River CANAGA, full of Woods, Mountainous, and in some parts Defart; but plentiful enough of Corn, Rice, Citrons, and Pomegranates, with good store of Cotton-wool. Well watered besides that great River, with some lesser Streams. Sufficiently populous, and stored with good Towns and Villages, the habitations of the Shepherds and Husbandmen; as the chief Town called CANO is of wealthy Merchants. This the Seat-Royal of their King, a Tributary also unto him of TOMBO, environed with a wall, built of a Chalk-stone, as most part of the houses are.

the Amomum of the Sina; Amomum being the name of a sweet perfume growing in Assyria and Armenia. But then it should be written Sinamomum, and not Cinnamomum; yet to give the greater credit to the former opinion, they of Ormus call it Bar-China, or the wood of China. But of this enough.

To go on therefore unto Æthiopia it self; The people of it in old times were said to have been great Astrologers; the first ordainers also of sacred Ceremonies, and in both to be Tutors to the Egyptians. They were also noted to be very good Archers, and to draw the longest and strongest Bows of any Nation: the Persian Bow (though those the greatest of all Asia) being only three cubits long; but these of Æthiopia four. Numitur etiam Æthiopes quatuor cubitorum arcibus, as we read in Strabo; the like is said also by Hierodotus and Diodorus. Their Arrows small, but strong, for the most part poisoned; Æthiops also by Hierodotus Vulgera, as we find in Claudius; and for that inhumanity very much condemned. But geminata venenis Vulgera, as we find in Claudius; and for that inhumanity very much condemned. But not to spend our time too much upon these particulars, Pliny reciteth two strange things of this Country: 1 That the Air and Ground are so parching hot, that the people not only dare not go out of doors without shoes, but that they roast their meat also by setting it in the Sun. 2 That there is a Lake whole waters are thrice a day, and thrice a night, exceeding salt and unpleasing; but at all other times most sweet and delicate to the palate.

This Country being as big as Germany, France, and Italy laid together, is but meanly populous, the disposition of the Climate, and the drie barrenness of the ground, not admitting a multitude. For this cause Africa is by Strabo compared to a Leopard's skin, the distance of whose Spots sheweth the difference of the Towns and habitations in those torrid Countries. A Country scarce in Wheat, but plentiful in Rice, Barly, Beans, Pease, and the like; they have abundance of Sugars, Minerals of all sorts, and infinite herds of Oxen, Sheep, Goats. Finally, there is no Country under Heaven fitter for increase of Plants, and Living Creatures, if industry were not deficient. But in regard of this defect, they are destitute of many necessary things, which otherwise the natural commodities of the Country would supply them with. For they have here great store of Flax, but make no Cloth; plenty of Vines, yet make no Wine, except it be to serve the palaces of the King and the Patriarch; abundance of Sugar-canes, and Mines of Iron, but know not how to make use of either unto any advantage. Rivers and Brooks in many places, but will not take the pains to dig Channels or trenches, to derive their waters to the rest of the land which want them; those Rivers almost choked with Fish, their Woods crammed with Venison, which they trouble not themselves to catch.

By this we may conjecture somewhat of the people also; Lazie and given unto their ease, ill clothed, and not much better housed; extremely inclined to Barbarism, destitute of all learning, not to be credited unless they swear by the life of their Emperours; they have a Smith equally with the Devil: their colour is generally Olive-tawny, excepting onely their King himself, who is alwayes of a white complexion, a wonderful prerogative, if true. This blackness of their bodies, by the Poet attributed to the burning of the world by Phaeton.

Æthiopiūm populos nigrum traxisse colorem.*

Which may be Englished thus:

Their blood (it's thought) drawn from the outward part,
The Æthiopsians grew so black and swart.

But the true cause hereof, whatsoever it be, may perhaps be looked upon hereafter, when we cometo America.

The Christian Faith was first made known in this Country, by the Eunuch of Queen Candace, who was baptized by Philip the Evangelist, and one of the Seven; more generally embraced by the pains and preaching of St. Matthew the Apostle hereof; but not totally propagated over all this Empire, till the reign of Abraham, Anno 470. who in his life entituled himself the Defender and Propagator of the Religion of CHRIST, and after his death was generally honoured as a Saint. Suppressed in part by the coming in of the Antiques and other Arabians, it was again revived and more universally received than in former times, in the reign of David King of the Axumite Æthiopsians: who in a War against Dumma the King of the Homerites in Arabia Felix, solemnly vowed to the God of the Christians to become one of his Followers, if he got the victory: and so accordingly he did, sending his Ambassadors to the Emperour Justinian, for some Bishops and other learned men to instruct his people. The particulars of those Opinions wherewith they have since corrupted the purity of the true Religion, I find thus registred. 1 They use to circumcise their Children, both males and females; 2 They baptize the males 40, and the females 80 dayes after their circumcision; 3 After the receipt of the Sacrament, they are not to spit till Sun-set; 4 They profess but one Nature and one Will in CHRIST; 5 They accept only the three first General Councils; 6 Their Priests live by the labour of their hands, for they allow them nothing, and permit them not to beg; 7 They baptize themselves every Epiphany day in Lakes and ponds, because that day they suppose Christ to have been baptised by John in Jordan; 8 They eat not of those Beasts, which in the old Law are reckoned for unclean; 9 They keep the Saturday or Jewish Sabbath, equally solemn with the Lords Day; 10 They administer the Encharist to Infants presently after birth, equally solemn with the Lords Day; 11 They teach, that the Reasonable soul of man is derived from their parents by seminial propagation; 12 That Infants dying unbaptised, are sanctified in the womb, by virtue of the Encharist reparation; 12 That Infants dying unbaptised, are sanctified in the womb, by virtue of the Encharist reparation; And finally, they shew a Book of eight Volumes, writ, as they they say, by the Apostles assembled at Hierusalem for that purpose; the Contents whereof they observe most solemnly. These are the most material points in which they differ from the Tendries of the Catholic Church. And there are other points in which they differ only from the Church of Rome, as viz. 1 Admittit in both kinds; 2 Without either Elevation, or Reservation; 3 Rejecting magic images; and 4 Extreme Unction; 5 Allowing the first marriages to their Priests and Bishops; and 6 In renouncing all relation to the Church of Rome; who to the business of these Churches is a very stranger; and so hath been from the very first foundation of them. For it appears by the Canons of the Nicene Council, extant in the Arabick, and translated into Latine by Pisanus, that the Patriarch (or Abuna, as they called him) of these Abassine Churches, was in those times subordinate to the Alexandrian, confirmed in that Supremacie by the Fathers, which were there assembled; and constantly ever since approved and practised by these Churches: in the Liturgies whereof, the name of the Alexandrian is remembered before their own. To this Patriarch, by an ancient privilege belongeth the tenth place in the Sessions of all General Councils; the Archbishop of Seleucia (or Babylon) only interposing betwixt him and the Patriarch of Hierusalem. Elected by the Abassine Monks of St. Antonies Order remaining in Hierusalem, and confirmed by the Patriarch of Alexandria, (of which Order, and of whose jurisdiction he must always be) he is sent into this Country to take his charge: where in some points of Civil nature, he hath equal privilege with the Emperour himself; and in Spiritual, hath the sole power of excommunicating an obstinate sinner. All other Ecclesiastical Dignities, from the Bishoprick to the lowest Benefice, are conferred by the Emperour only.

The principal Mountains of it in the former times, had the names of 1 Prionotus, 2 Iesus, 3 Monodactylus, 4 Gaurus, and 5 Mont Saturnum; all of them in that part which was called Trogloditica: 6 Garbala, 7 Elephas, and 8 Masse, in the Isle of Meroe: the rest of the Country flat and level, or the hills not eminent. Rivers of most note, 1 Astapus, (now Abanni) arising out of a great Lake called Coloe, now the Lake of Barcena. 2 Astaboras, now Tacusi; both falling into the River Nilus. 3 Nilus, of which before when we were in Egypt; whose Spring unprofitably sought for in the elder times, is now said to be out of the Lake Zemire in the other Æthiopia, eleven Degrees beyond the Equator: whence passing through spacious Deserts, large Lakes, and many great Kingdoms, he at last entereth into this. Here in some places struggling amongst broken Rocks, and left free passages, he falleth with such a wonderful noise into the Vallies beneath, that a Colony planted by the Persians near one of these Cataracts, (so they call those huge falls of his) were so dulled and deafened with the noise, that they were faine to abandon their habitations. Nor doth it only dull and deafen the neighbouring people, but the very hills do seem to tremble at the noise it maketh. Of which thus the Poet,

*Cuncta tremunt undis, et multo murmure montes,
Spumens invictis albescit fluctibus amnis.*

Which may be Englished in these words;

The noise the Mountains shakes, who roar for spite
To see th' unvanquish'd VVaves cloath'd all in white.

Of these Cataracts there are two most noted: the one called Cataractes Major, in the borders of this Country towards Egypt, but South of both the Cities of Phila, and Pseleus, Æthiopian Cities; the other called Cataractes Minor, not far from Elephantis a City of Egypt, neighbouring to Syene the last City of that Country towards this. So turbulent is this River amongst the Hills. And yet as terrible as these Falls are supposed to be, one may divers times see the Country people in a little Boat not able to contain above two persons, to venture down them without fear: appearing after they have been long tossed in the water, a great distance off, as if they had been shot out of an Engine. Nor is he of such quiet passage in the open Countries, but that the Inhabitants of this Kingdom are faine to cut many Ditches, Sluces, and By-channels to receive his waters, which if not curbed and lessened by such wayes as these, might by some sudden overflowing much endanger Egypt: in respect whereof the Sultans of Egypt have paid for long time to the Abassine Emperours, an annual tribute. Which when the Great Turk, supposing it a needless charge, had once denied: this people, by the command of their Emperour, did open their Sluces, and brake down the Dams: whereby the water fell so violently and so fast unto Egypt, that the Turk was not only glad to continue the tribute, but to give them great sums of money to make up their works. But others say, that this acknowledgment was paid by the Egyptian Kings, not so much for keeping up the waters from drowning Egypt, as for fear the Abassine Emperours should divert the Stream, and so deprive that Country of the benefit of it. But I incline rather to the former. Here are also said to be some Lakes of that poisonous nature, that whosoever drinketh of them, doth either immediately fall mad, or else is troubled for long time with continual dreams. Of which thus Ovid:

*Æthiopsque Lacus; quos si quis faucibus hausit,
Aut furit, aut patitur mirum gravitate soporem.*

Which may be paraphrased in these words:

Who doth not know the Æthiopian Lake?
Of which whoever drinks, his thirst to slake

Æthiops

Amara.

3 ANGOTE.

ANGOTE is bounded on the North, with Tigremas, on the West, with Nilu; on the South, with the Kingdom of Amara; on the East, with Dancali, and Xoa. Indifferently compounded of Hills and Vallies, both extremely fertile, productive of the choicest fruits, and great herds of Cattel. The people eat but once in 24 hours, and for the most part make that meal in the night; their diet raw Venison, or smoked Beef: the money most in use amongst them, Salt, Pepper, and Iron. Which cost of using Salt, Pepper, and the like, instead of money, was in former times amongst most people the onely battery, or way of exchange. So in Homer, Glancus golden Armour was valued at an hundred Kine, and Diomedes Armour at ten onely. Afterward in Justice commutative, it was deemed convenient, to have some common Judge, or valuation, of the equality or inequality of goods: the invention of which, the Jews attribute to Cain; the Grecians to Hermodice the wife of Midus, the Romans to Janus. It is called Nummus, or pecunia from pecus, because it was ordained by Law: Pecunia, either because in elder times the chief of their wealth consisted in Cattel, as now among the Irish; or from a Cow (Pecus) which was stamped on it: and Moneta, a monendo, as Suidas saith; because when the Romans stood in need of money, Junio moneta, Junio admonished them that they should use Justice; and there should be no want of money. To this Goddess, Dea Pecunia, the Romans erected a Temple, and worshipped it in the figure of a Woman holding a pair of Scales in one hand, and a Cornucopia in the other: by the Poets called Regina Pecunia, and not unfitly, the greatness of her power considered.

But to return again to Angote, I find not much spoken of the Countrey in the way of story; nor meet I with the names of any of their Towns, or Cities; unless that 1 Angote it self, as also 2 Augana, 3 Ginnamora, two of the principal Provinces of it, may possibly be so called from their principal Towns, as perhaps they are.

4 AMARA.

AMARA hath on the North, Angote; on the South, Damut; on the West, it stretcheth towards the Nile; and on the East, bounded with the Realm of Xoa. The Countrey very plain and champion, little swelled with Hills, sufficiently fruitful, and well stored with all sorts of Cattel. The chief City of it called Amara, by the name of the Province, situate in the midst of the Empire, and though not much distant from the Equator, if not plainly under it, yet blessed with such a temperate air, such a fruitful soil, such ravishing pleasures of all sorts, that some have taken (but mistaken) it for the place of Paradise: So strangely Heaven, Earth, Nature, and humane industry, have joyned their helps together to enrich and beautifie it.

But that which is the greatest Ornament of this Province, and indeed of the whole Empire of Æthiopia, is the Mountain Amara, situate in a large and delightful plain: the bottom of the Hill in circuit 90 Miles, and a dayes journey high; the Rock so smooth and even (but lesser and lesser towards the top) that no wall can be more evenly polished: the way up to it is cut out within the Rock, through wop) that no wall can be more evenly polished: the way up to it is cut out within the Rock, through which are divers holes forced to let in the light; so easie of ascent, that one may ride up with great pleasure, and in the midst of the Ascent a spacious Hall, as it were: to rest in: the top it self is a large plain, 20 leagues in circuit, compassed with an high wall, to the end that neither man nor beast fall down upon any chance; beautified towards the South with a rising Hill, out of which issueth a sweet Spring, which watering the several Palaces and Gardens of it, uniteth it self into a Lake for the use of Cattel: the plain enriched with all sorts, both of fruit and grain; adorned with two magnificent Monasteries, in each of which are founded 1500 Knights of the Order of St. Anthony, a Religious Militia; and honoured with 34 Palaces, in which the younger sons of the Emperour are continually enclosed, to avoid sedition. They enjoy there whatsoever is fit for delight, or Princely education; and from hence some one of them, who is most hopeful, or best liked, is again brought out, if the Emperour die Sonless, to be made Successor. This Mountain hath but one ascent up, as before was said, which is impregnable fortified; and was destinate to this use, Anno 470. or thereabouts, by the Emperour Abraham Philip, advised hereunto, as he gave out, by an heavenly vision. In one of these Palaces is a famous Library, where-in are said to be many Books, which with us are either in part, or totally lost: as the Oracles of Enoch, with the mysteries which escaped the flood, being by him engraven on Pillars; the whole works of Liwy, and others. Which being heretofore translated by the Saracens into the Arabick Tongue (when having plundered all the most famous Libraries of the East and West, they burnt the Originals, out of a Plot to make that Language as renowned and as generally studied, as the Greek or Latine) are said by some good fortune to be here preserved.

5 DAMUT.

DAMUT hath on the North, Amara; on the West, Bagamedrum; on the South, Goiamy; and on the East, the great Lake of Barcena, and some part of Zanguebar, one of the Provinces of Æthiopia Extior. The Countrey plentifully furnished with Gold, Ginger, Grapes, Fruits and living Creatures of all sorts. For none more famed than for their Slaves, sold in great numbers into Aravia, Egypt, Persia, India; and much esteemed by them who buy them, for their abilities in War, dexterity in buisness, but specially for their fidelity in all things which they undertake. For this cause placed placed in Offices of great trust and power, by many of the Eastern Princes: who using a tyrannical Form of Government, and not daring to trust the Sword into the hands of their Subjects, or to advance them unto places of Court, or Council; do for the most part arm these Slaves, and trust them also with the conduct of their chief affairs. A trust, in which they never falsified, or failed in a true discharge, but when presuming of their power, and those advantages which so great a trust and power had preferred to them; they got into their hands the Kingdom of Bengala; and kept it many years in a subjection of the Abassin Slaves; wherewith they still made up their numbers, till outed not long since by the Great Mogul.

The Oxen of this Countrey are said to be near as great as Elephants; their Horns so large that they serve as Tankards to carry, and as Barrels to keep either wine or water. Here is also said to be a kind of Unicorn, very fierce and wild, fashioned like an Horse, but no bigger than an As; but we must think these Unicorns to be but Rhinoceros, or else we shall very much mistake the truth of the matter. And for the people (to go them both over once again) they are for the most part Gentiles; some Christians intermix amongst them, who have sundry Monasteries.

To this Kingdom belongeth the Principality of Coucha, said to have more Gold in it than all Aravia; a Mountain all of Gold, if the Friars say true. The people Gentiles, but the Prince not long since gained to the Christian Faith; into which he was baptized by the Abbot or chief Governour of the Monastery on the hill Amara: Graden the Emperour being his Godfather, by whom named André. And here they have an hill of great height, and very difficult ascent; from the top whereof they use to cast headlong such of the Nobility, as by the Emperours sentence are condemned to die. What Towns they have either in that Kingdom or this Principality, I am not able to resolve, unless, 1 Damut, and 2 Coucha may be two, and the two most eminent, as giving name to those Estates.

GOIAMY hath on the North, Damut; on the West, Bagamedrum; on the South and East, some Provinces of the other Æthiopia. The Countrey in the North parts full of Deserts and Rocky Mountains, in the residue plentifully furnished with all things necessary. Great store of Gold they find, but drossie; the people not knowing how to refine and purifie it; or loth here (as in other places of this Empire) to take pains that way; for fear of drawing in the Turks and Arabians, to partake of the booty.

It containeth in it many Rivers, or rather Torrents, which come tumbling down the hills with a mighty violence, and a terrible fall, making a noise, not much inferiour to a clap of Thunder; and amongst other Lakes, two of special note, which for their greatness seem to be Seas; in which as some report, Mermaids and Tritons, or Men-fishes use to shew themselves; and out of which it is thought by others, that the Fountains of Nilu do arise; and both true alike. But past all doubt the Abassins themselves are of this opinion; and therefore in the title of the Negaz, (so they call their Emperour) he is termed King of Goiamy, with this addition, In which are found the Fountains of Nilu. Deceived alike in their opinion touching this particular, the Springs, or Fountains of that River being further South; though possibly having lost himself in these vast Lakes, and issuing hence into a more contracted Channel; he may be said to have a second birth from hence, though not the first. And these I take to be the Lakes which were discovered by the Romans in the time of Nero. Who following the delign of some other great Potentates, Sesostrius, Cambyzes, Alexander, and Philadelphus, in discovering the true Original of this famous River; employed to Centurions in that service; who aided in it by the then King of the Æthiopians, are said to have come at last unto certain great Marishes (most probably the lower and sedgey parts of these Lakes now mentioned) of whose extent the Inhabitants themselves were ignorant, nor possible to be discovered any further, the Weeds having so overgrown the Water, that there was no further passage to be made by Boat, and less by wading.

Between this Countrey and Damut, which we last passed thorow, is said to be a Province of Amazons, warlike and fierce, and very expert at the Bow; whose Queen knoweth no man, and by the rest honoured as a Goddess. These, they say, were first instituted by the Queen of Saba; as true, as that which some have added of the Phoenix visible in this Countrey, of Griffons, and of Enyls so big that they make a shadow like a Cloud. Which strange reports I have here added, to supply the defect of Towns and Cities, of which I meet not with so much as the naked names; as undiscovered places in our Maps and Charts, are filled up with Monsters.

7 BAGAMEDRUM.

BAGAMEDRUM, or SAGAMEDRUM, (for I find both names) lieth on the West of Goiamy; betwixt the Northern parts thereof, and the River Nilu; and keeping all along the course of that River, as far as Gnagere, or Meroe, encountreth with the Southern point of Barnagasso. Some do extend it also beyond that Island, but making the whole length thereof but 600 miles, do confine themselves. The greatest Province of this Empire it may probably be, ceteris hujus Æthiopie amplissimum, as they say it is; but if extended the whole length of it, it must be 1500 miles, not 600 onely.

The Countrey plentiful in Mines of the purest Silver, which they cannot draw thence but by fire, which makes it run like long rods, or ropes of Metal. And yet as large and wealthy as they say it is; I am more to seek for Towns and rich Cities in it, than in the Deserts of Libya, or the sands of Aravia. Mer-

Barnagasso.

Merchants and Travellers for the most part go no further than the Sea-coasts of the Country: of which they give us more exact and full informations, knowing but little of the In-lands; and of the Natives, such as have travelled abroad into other Kingdoms, rude and ignorant men, know little more of their own Empire, than the place they lived in. Or probably their best Cities not containing above a few houses, few of them so many, and those patched up of starch, dirt, and hurdles, (unless some of the Nobility, or wealthier Merchants are provided better;) they may have no greater reason to speak much of them; or to acquaint us with the names of such sorry places; as to indeed not worth the naming. Which I conceive to be the true condition of most, or all the In-land Towns in this large Empire.

8 BARNAGAS SQ. a hill

BARNAGNES, or BARNAGASSUM, hath on the West Guaqere, or the Isle of Mero; on the Southwest as some say, a point of Begumdrum; on the South, Dangali and Adel; on the East, the Red Sea, or Bay of Arabia; on the North it stretcheth towards Egypt; the Kingdoms of Jesim and Sua, possessed by the Mahumans, being interposed.

The Country very fertile, full of Towns and Villages, and exceedingly well stored with pleasant Rivallets, besides the neighbourhood of the Red Sea on the one side, Nile and Abnakh on the other. Remarkable for a Admannia in the Western part of it, which being spacious in the beginning groweth thick by little and little, and then enlargeth it self again to a League in circuit. On the top thereof a Royal Palace, a Church, a Monastery, and two very large Cisterns, with a piece of ground able to entertain and keep 500 men. To be ascended one way only, and that by a certain mark; to which being come, they are drawn up with Cords and Baskets, to the top of all; not to be took by force, by reason of the impossibility of ascent: nor by long siege, or any extremity of Famine, in regard it yields provision enough to maintain it self. Accounted therefore the chief Hold of all this Province against Turky and Moors.

and Moors. It containeth besides Barnagasso it self, the two Provinces of Cusila, and Dasila; though rather subject to the Governour, or Vice-Roy of it, than parts and members of the same. Towns of most moment in the whole, 1 Beroa, or Barma, conceived by some to be the Colony of Ptolomy, the residence of the Vice-Roy, situate on a pleasant and fishful River. 2 Zameta, honoured sometimes also with the Vice-Roy preference; but rather as a retiring place in times of leisure, than a Town of strength. 3 Suachen, situate in an Island of the Red Sea, or Bay of Arabia, one of the richest Cities of the Eastern parts; and beautified with a goodly and capacious Haven, secured by nature from all storms, of smooth tides, full Anchorage, and able to receive 300 great ships of burden. Situate in a little Island, the whole circumference whereof it taketh up; insomuch that Vessels of all sorts, both within the Haven and without, do usually unlade themselves at the doors of the Merchants, to which the Ship-beaks serve for bridges. A wealthy and well traded Town both by Sea and Land, to which from the more In-land parts of the Abassine Empire, the Mountains open a safe passage for the carriage and re-carriage of their commodities. Taken by the Turks long since, with all the rest of the Country lying betwixt it and Egypt, and made the seat of a Turkish Beglerbeg, or Bassa; whom in imitation of the Romans, they call the Beglerbeg of Abassia; as if by the possession of this small part of that Empire, they would entitle the Grand Signior unto all the rest. The Town conceived by some, to be that which Ptolomy calleth Opisium Sabaticum, or rather Sabatiticum, as called by Strabo. Others will have it to be the Succa of Pliny, or Succa of Pliny, as Pliny calleth it, of the Ancient Writers. And some again will have it to be the Succa of Pliny, by whom reckoned among the Cities of the Troglodites (who are called Succae in the Scriptures, as before was noted) in whose part of the Country it is seated, and to which name it hath some resemblance. 4 Bisum, not far from Erecco, remarkable for a Monastery situate on the top of an high Rock, environed with dreadful Precipices upon every side; in which live 3000 Monks, eating by three and three together, in a common Refectory: this being the chief of six others in this Province of Barnagasso, the furthest not above 30 miles distant. For maintenance of whom, and a great number of poor Children which they daily feed, besides the riches of all the Mountain in which it standeth (fruitful and rich, and at least 30 miles in compass) they have many good Farms at the foot of the said Mountain, and an hundred small Villages appertaining to them, out of which they raise yearly great provision of Corn, and above 2000 head of Cattel; their Revenues out of Tigremoon being reckoned in. A Revenue able to maintain them and their Hospitality, in regard their Novices, or young Monks are sent abroad to earn their living, or to manure their Lands, and attend the husbandry of the house: the elder only being found at the charge of the Monastery, though all alike bound to the performance of Religious Offices. 5 Erecco, another noted Port on the Red Sea, or Bay of Arabia, to which a passage openeth through the Streets of the Mountains, as it doth to Suachen, conceived to be the Adulis of Ptolomy, the Adulonis of Pliny, now in possession of the Turks, or at their command. 6 Santar, 7 Gjabel, 8 Luccari, and 9 Abrach, these four last in the Province of Dasila.

This Country at the present, and for long time past, is subject both to the Great Negus, or the Presfigin of Ethiopia, and the Grand Seigneur of the Turks; naturally subject to the one, and tributary to the other. Governed by a King of their own, whom they call Barnagassu, by the name of his Province, a Vassal and Homager to the Ethiopian; to whom he payeth the yearly tribute of 150 of the best breed of Horses, besides some quantities of Silk, and some other commodities: but so ill neighboured by the Turks, that he is fain to pay also to the Beglerbeg or Bassa resident at Snacben, 1000 ounces of Gold yearly for a composition. For the Turks having by the conquest of Egypt made themselves Masters of those Countries towards Ethiopia, which formerly were allied to, or confederate with the Ama- malneck Sultans; within short time (viz. An. 1558.) possessed themselves also of the Town of Sinabuba and the parts adjoining; made it the residence of one of their Beglerbegs or Bassia's, and gave him the title of Beglerbeg of Bassia, as before was said: Forgotten by the industrious Collector of the Turkish History, in his enumeration of the Beglerbegs or Bassia's of Africk. To this they added not long after all the rest of the Sea-coasts, and the Port of Erocco; and not content therewith, after some short breathing made a further invade; in which they did to waste the Country, that in the end they compelled the Barnagassian (not being aided by the Neguz) to this Composition.
maluck

9. DANGALI, & 10. DOBAS.

South and South-east of Barnagasso, lie the two Kingdoms of DANGALI, and DOBAS; that of Dangali bordering on the Red-Sea, the other more within the Land: both of them held by the Mahomedans or Arabian Moors, both in continual enmity with the Abissine Emperours; and both of like nature, in regard of the soil, and people.

DANGALL hath on the North, Barnagasso; on the South, some part of the Kingdom of Adel; on the East, the Red-Sea; or Gulf of Arabia; on the West, Dokas before mentioned. It taketh up some part of the Arabick Bay, within the Streits of Babel-Mandel; and without those Streits, the greatest part of that spacious Bay, which anciently was called Sinus Aualiticus, as far as to the Promontory then called Mofylon, (neighbour'd by a noted Empire of the same name) now the Cape of Docono; neer unto which the Sea makes a little Gulf, and suddenly streitneth it self again; so as the Channel cannot be above ten or twelve leagues broad. And in this Channel are five or six Islands, which hinder the passage; so as Sailors must have good experience to avoid the Rocks which lie neer those Islands.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Bebuli, or Babel, which gives name to the Streits of Babel-Mandel, a narrow Frith, opening out of the Bay of Arabia into the Æthiopian or Indian Ocean. 2 Pella, a well-frequented Port, conceived to be the same which Strabo calleth Aniphila; not found by that name in Ptolomy. 3 Zagmani, and 4 Zama, in a Province of this Kingdom called Læcea. 5 Docono, neer the Cape so called, and therefore probably the Mojylon of the antient Writers. 6 Dandali, not far from the Sea-side, which gives name to the Kingdom. Nothing else memorable of this Kingdom, but that there are in it two great Lakes, wherein live Crocodiles, as in Nilus.

On the South-west of Dangali lieth the Realm of DOBAS, extended on the West to the borders of Angote. The Country large, containing twelve, or as some say, 24 several Prefectures: Of good Pasturage, that the Kine hereof are of greater lize than in other places, and those for number not easily matched in all this Empire. The people full professed Enemies of the Christian faith, that they suffer not any man to marry, till he hath killed twelve Christians. Some reckon them for Tributaries to the Prete, or Neguz; but it is only when they lift: so far from being Contributions towards the support of his estate, that they take from him what they can. The chief of their Towns, 1 Doba, which gives name to the whole Kingdom. 2 Bally, upon the same River on which Dobas standeth, but more near the head.

II. ADEL.

ADEL is bounded on the North, with some parts of Dangali, and the Red-Sea; on the South, with Adea; on the East, with the Red-Sea, and the Indian or Arabian Ocean; on the West, with Fatigar: extended on the Sea coast from the Cape of Docono, to the Cape of Guardafiu, conceived most probably to be the Aromata of Ptolomy, a noted Promontory in his time.

• The Country plentiful of Fleth, Honey, Wax, Corn, Gold, and Ivory; great flocks of Sheep, and many of those Sheep of such burdenned Fleeces, that their tails weigh 25 pounds: some Kine they have, which have horns like a Stag; others but one horn only, and that in the fore-head, about a foot and an half long, but bending backwards. The people inhabiting on the Sea-coasts, are of Arabian parentage, and of the Mahometan Religion; those towards the Inland Countries, of the old Ethioppick race, and wholly Gentiles.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Zeila, a noted Port-town, situate in or neer the place where Ptolomy placeth Avallites: stored with variety of merchandife, and yielding some representation of Antiquity in the building thereof, being lime and stone; materials not much used amongst them in these later times. Of great both beauty and esteem, till the year 1516. when sacked and burnt by the Portugals; before that time the most noted Empery of all Athiopia for the Indian trade. 2 Barbara, seated on the same Sea-coast, well frequented by Merchants, and possibly may be the Mundi or Malao of Ptolomy; neighbored by a lofty Promontory, which they call Mount Fellez. 3 Mette, another of the Sea-towns neer the Cape of Guardafu supposed to be the Acané of the Antient writers. 4 Assam, 5 Selir, and 6 Bidar, on the Sea-coasts also. 7 Arar, the principal of the Kingdom, more within the Land, and about 38 Leagues from Zeila.

This Country formerly a member of the Ethiopian Empire, is of late grown to so great strength and reputation, that the Kings hereof have freed themselves from all tigns of subjection to that Crown, and think themselves the mightier Princes of the two. Advanced to this repute and power by Gradagna, or Gradameth, who reigned here in the year 1540. by whom Clandium the Neguz was so overlaid, and his Country so destroyed by continual incursions, that he was forced to abandon his Frontiers, retire himself into the heart of his Eitates, and crave aid of the Portugals. And though by their assistance, and the help of their shor, he was twice victorious; yet in the third battel he was vanquished, and in the Adel. the fourth, An. 1559. slain upon the place. This King accounted for a Saint by the Moors and Saracens, in regard of his continual wars against the Christians, did so establish the affairs of his little Kingdom, and left it so well settled unto his Successors, that the Abassine Emperour hath ever since left it out of his Titles; though many other of those small Kingdoms are reckoned in the Imperial Stile, in which he hath as little power as he hath in this. It is said also that in the battle wherein Claudius was slain, and his Army routed, consisting of 60000 Foot, and 5000 Horse of his own Subjects, besides the Portugals, the King of Adel got into his possession the greatest mass of Coin and Treasure that was ever seen. A victory obtained as well by policy as force: the Abassines being seldom fought with, or their Country waited and depopulated by the Kings of Adel, till by the strict observance of their Lenten Fast, they were grown so weak, that they were not able to discharge their domestick businesses, and therefore most unable to resist a prevailing Enemy.

12. ADEA.

ADEA, or ABEX, as some call it, hath on the North, the Kingdom of Adel; on the South and West, some parts of the Abassine Empire; on the East, the Sea. Extended from the Cape of Guardafu, where it joyneth with Adel, along the greatest part of the Bay, called of old Sinus Barbaricus; of the reason of which name hereafter.

The Country plentifully fertile, shaded with Woods and spacious Forrests, and those Woods liberally furnished both with Fruits and Cattel; the Champagne Country not less fruitful in Wheat, Barley, and other necessities, besides a great store of Horses. The people of an Olive-colour, in some places more inclined to black: Not clothed, but from the girdle downward; nor very well armed in time of war, but with poisoned Arrows; Mahometans in Religion, Arabians by original extraction, whose language they retain with some little difference in pronunciation.

Places of most observation in it. 1 Aden, which gives name to the whole Kingdom, because the old residence of the Kings. 2 Corsur upon the Sea-coast, sometimes called Opone, then a noted Emporie, and situate near the Promontory called Zingis extrema. 3 Azun, and 4 Zuzelle, supposed to be the Essina, and Tonica, of the Ancient Writers. 5 Magadaxo, a petty Kingdom of it self; a wealthy and well traded Town, situate in a fruitful and delightful soyl, and neighboured by a safe and capacious Haven: much traded by the Portugals, whom bring from Adere in Arabia Felix, and Cambata in India, their Spices, Silks, and other Indian commodities; which here they barter and exchange for Honey, Wax, Gold, and Abassine Slaves, which last they value as the chiefest merchandize which this Country yieldeth. First built by some Arabian Moors, who flying from the King of Laza their mortal Enemy, under the conduct of seven brethren, came into these parts, where they founded this City, and that of Brava in the Province of Barus, of which more hereafter.

The Inhabitants are originally of Arabia, as before was said; who many hundred years ago became Lords of all the Sea-coasts of both Æthiopia, as far as to the Cape dos Corrientes, which is somewhat to the South of the Tropic of Capricorn. The Kings hereof in former times, Vassals to the Abassine Emperour, to whom they paid an yearly tribute; this Kingdom still remaining amongst his titles: but since the taking of Magadaxo, made so obnoxious to the power and command of the Portugals, that the Estate of the Abassine in it is but merely titular.

13. FATIGAR, & 14. XOA.

FATIGAR hath on the East, Adel, and some part of Aden; on the West, the little Realm of Xoa; on the South, Barus, another Province of this Empire. The Country Champagne, sufficiently fruitful of Corn and Cattel, not meanly furnished with pleasant and delicious fruits. Most memorable for a Lake of twelve miles in compass, on the top of a Mountain, well stored with Fish; from whence and from the rest of the Mountain issue many Rivers, which much enrich the Vallies and Fields adjoining. The chief Town hereof, (if any one be better than other) I conceive to be Fatigar, giving this name unto the Kingdom, or so called from it.

Westward of Fatigar, lieth the little Realm of XOA, bordering West on Amara; Southward upon Damus; furnished with great store of Corn and Cattel, but not much beautified with Towns of any consideration. Nothing observable in the History, or Description of it, but that together with Fatigar and others of the mid-land Provinces, it hath continued constant in obedience to the Abassine Emperors, notwithstanding all those misadventures which have hapned to that Empire in these latter days.

15. BARUS.

ON the South-East of Aden, lieth the Province of BARUS, extended Eastward to some part of Sinus Barbaricus; and touching at the Western point, upon that of Fatigar. The soyl and people much of the same condition, with the rest of Æthiopia. Mahometans upon the Shores, but Christians for the generality in the mid-land parts. Those Christians subject (as the rest) to the Abassine Emperour; but he hath neither place of strength, or consideration in all the Country: those of most note. 1 Brava, once a Free Town, and governed after the manner of a Common-wealth, by twelve Aldermen, or Common-Councillors, descended from the seven Arabian brethren by whom first built; the founders of Magadaxo also, as before was said. But now, together with 2 Pate, and 3 Gogia, all all upon the Sea, made subject to the Portugals; by whom taken under the Conduct of Tristan de Cunha.

Besides these, there are many other Kingdoms mustered in the Stile Imperial, (the swelling vanity whereof we shall see anon) but of so little observation in the course of business, and so obscure in the esteem of such as have spoken of them, that it is enough to tell you where to finde their names: and having found their names, to bid you not to seek for more; there being nothing else in them which is worth the knowing.

As for the body aggregated of these several Members, it was first planted, as is noted and proved elsewhere, by Ludim the son of Mizraim, and the Nephew of Cham: from whence this Nation in the Scripture hath the name of Ludim. A Nation not much taken notice of in the first Ages of time, but by an Error of Josephus: who giving too much credit to some Talmudical Tales, or willing to advance the reputation of the Jews to the highest pitch, telleth us a story, how the Æthiopians invaded and endangered Egypt, how they were beaten back by Moses; the City of Meroe besieged and taken by him, or rather delivered to his hands, by Tharbis the daughter of the King, who had fallen in love with him, and on the betraying of the City was married to him. All this not only questioned, but rejected by discerning men, as a Jewish Fable, that hath no ground to stand upon in true Antiquity. With little better fortune, and as little truth do the Æthiopians tell the story of their own Original. By whom we are informed, that Chus the son of Cham, first reigned in this Æthiopia; to whom succeeded his son Regma, and next after Dedan: that from the death of Dedan till the reign of Aruch (the certain time whereof they tell not) the people lived in Caves and holes digged under the ground; as did the Troglodytes, an ancient Nation of this Country, in the times long after: that Arac first built the City of Aruma, and by that pattern taught them the use of Towns and Cities. But the main part of the Legend is the story of Maqueda a Queen hereof, and fourth from Aruch; whom they will have to be the Queen of Sheba, famous in both Testaments, for the Royal Visit which she bestowed upon Solomon. Of whom they tell us, that being got with Child by Solomon when she was in his Court, she was delivered of a Son, whom she caused to be called Melech, or Mellech; and at the age of 20 years, to be sent to his Father. By whom instructed in the Law, and circumcised, and called by the name of David; he was returned into his Country, with Azarias the Son of Zadok the Priest, who had stolen the two Tables of the Law, and carried them with him into Æthiopia; where the old Queen resigned the Empire to her Son. His Successors afterwards called David, till Indion (as they call him) the Eunuch of Queen Candace returning home, baptized the young Prince by the name of Philip. This is the substance of the Legend, as related by them in their own Chronicles (but we know that they are no Gospel.) That Chus planted in Arabia hath been shewn already, as also what absurdities must needs arise from supposing the Land of Chus to be this Æthiopia. Therefore most probable it is, that this Country was first peopled by the Children of Indim, as before was said. To whom the Abassines coming out of Arabia Felix, might be after added: and in some tract of time be of such great power as to put their name upon the Country. For that the Abassines were originally an Arabian people, appears by Stephanns, one of the old Chorographers, who out of Arrianus (an ancient Author than himself) hath told us this, 'Abassini ἄρχοντες Ἀραβίας. Another Stephanns, and he a very learned Grammarian and Lexicographer, hath, as he thinks, decided the controversy, by making Sheba the Son of Chus the Progenitor of the Arabians; and Sheba the Son of Regma, the Father of the Æthiopians: and for this cause hath sided us with this pretty Criticism, that Sheba when it is written with Sameth, must be rendered Æthiopia; and Arabia, when writ with Shin. But this by no means will be found to agree the controversy: it being evidently clear, that both Sheba the son of Chus, and Sheba the son of Regma, were originally settled in Arabia, as hath there been shewn; though I deny not but that some of the Posterity of Chus in those elder times, (before the coming over of the Abassine Nations) might either out of too much populosity, or desire of change cross over the Arabian Gulf, and take up such part of this Country as the Ludims had not fully peopled, with whom conjunct at last, both in name and government. And for Maqueda (supposing that to be her name) she was doubtless Queen of the Sabaans in Arabia Felix; not of the Æthiopians, in the waste of Africk. For besides the longsomeness of the way, too much for a Woman and a Queen to travel; it is very probable, that the Son of Solomon by this Lady, would never have suffered Egypt to have layen in quiet, whilst Sesuc the King thereof made war upon Rehoboam, the Son of Solomon also; and so by consequence his half brother. But to leave these uncertain Fables; the first action of moment which we meet with in unquestioned Story, touching these Æthiopians, is that which hapned betwixt them and Cambyses the Persian Monarch; who having by force of Arms united Egypt to Persia, conceived it to be worth his labour to unite Æthiopia unto Egypt also. Upon this resolution, he sent Ambassadors to that King, to search into the passages of his Country, and discover his strengths; and by them sent a Tun of wine, some Bracelets, a purple habit, and a box of sweet Oynments, to present him with. Which Presents being tendered to him, he looked upon the Unguents and the purple Robe as too slight; and effeminate; th Bracelets he conceived to be bonds, or fetters, and openly laugh at them; as too weak to hold in a prisoner: but with the Wine he was very well pleased, and sorrowed that his Country yielded no such liquor. But understanding well enough what this visit aimed at, he gave the Ambassadors at their parting, (amongst other gifts) an Æthiopian Bow of great length and strength; requiring them to tell their Master, that until every Persian could bend that Bow (the Æthiopian Bows being a foot longer than the Persian, as before was noted) it would be no safe warring upon his Dominions; and that he had good cause to thank the Gods for giving the Æthiopians so contented minds, as not to think of conquering their Neighbours Kingdoms. Lying far off, and parted from Egypt by vast Mountains, we finde them not looked after by the Macedonians. Nor had the Romans meddled medled with them, had they not been provoked by Candace, the Queen hereof, during the Empire of Augustus: who having made a War on Egypt, was by Petronius, Governour of that Province, brought to such conformity, that she was fain to sue for peace, and to purchase it with the loss of some part of her Country. To keep them quiet for the future, Phile an Æthiopian City, but on the borders of Egypt, is made a Garrison for the Romans, and the Seat of their Deputy for these parts: held by them till the Empire of Dioclesian, and by him abandoned, because the charge of keeping it did exceed the profit. After this, growing into power and reputation, the Æthiopian Kings were reckoned of as friends to the Roman Empire: in so much as Justinian sent unto Heliophem, as Justin his Successour did unto Archetas, the then Kings of this Country; so, crave their brotherly assistance against the Persians.

Of their Conversion to the Faith in the reign of a second Candace, (unless as Pliny thinketh, Candace was the general name of all their Queens) we have spoke already. To which the Æthiopians add, that after the baptizing of their first Philip (the Son of that Candace) by the hands of the Eunuch, the Emperours succeeding had the name of Philip; Till the religious life of John, a Cotemporary of the Emperour Constantin, honoured as a Saint after his decease, made them take his name. Some building upon this Tradition, have to the name of John prefixed that of Presbyter, because (as they affirm) he executeth as well the Sacerdotal as the Regal Office; Rex idem hominum, Divinusque Sacerdos, the very Anima of the Poet: And this so commonly received, that he is vulgarly called by the name of Prester John, and his Estate the Empire of Prester John, with nor truth at all. Others more probably conceive, that this vulgar name of Prester John, is but a corruption, or mistake for Præstarian or Precious John, and that the word Prete (by which his Subjects call him) importeth no less. And yet I more incline to those, who finding that the Word Prestegan signifieth an Apostle, in the Persian tongue; and Prestegani, an Apostolical man; do thereupon infer that the title of Padescha Prestegiani, an Apostolick King, was given unto him for the Orthodoxie of his belief. Which not being understood by some, instead of Prestegiani, they have made Priest John, in Latine Presbyter Johannes: as by a like mistake, one Tregent (or Prægian as the French pronounce it) Commander of some Gallies under Leuw the 12th. was by the English of those times called Prior John. Prestegian then, not Priest John, is his proper adjunct; contractedly, but commonly called the Prete, by the Modern French, who usually leave out s before a consonant. Their Empire greater heretofore, than it is at the present, shrewdly impaired of late times by the Turks, and Arabians: of which the first have taken from him all his Country, from the Isle of Mero unto Egypt, with all the Sea-coasts of Barnagasso; the later as much encroaching on them, on the rest of the Maritime parts of his Dominions. But from none have they suffered more, than the Kings of Adel; who have divers times laid waste their Country, discomfited some of them in the open Field, and in the year 1558. slain their King in battel; Not cured of those wounds to this very day. For Adam, who succeeded Claudius that was slain in battel, was so far from being able to revenge the death of his Predecessour, that being suspected to incline to Mahometanism, he was defeated by the under-King of Barnagasso. Since which time they have so languished by intestine dissensions, that though Alexander the third (if there were ever such a King, which I find much doubted) is said to have settled his affairs by the aid of the Portugals; and that some strange successes have been since reported of a later Emperour: yet the truth is, that the Estate hereof hath been so imbroyled in civil Wars, and so many of their Emperours successively murdered, that the power and reputation of it is exceedingly weakened, and the Country made a prey to impuissant Enemies. For in the year 603. the Emperour Alelech Gogad, who succeeded in the Throne by the depolition and imprisonment of his Predecessour (under colour of bastardy) was not long after slain by one Zexelezens; and James, or Jacob advanced unto the Empire: James not long after vanquished, and slain in the Fields of Guera, by one Sazinofius (contractedly by some called Susneas) his three Sons being forced to fly to provide for their safety. What became of the two eldest I have nowhere found. The youngest called Zaga Christos, after many hazardous wanderings, and accidents, arrived at last into Italy, and thence he came to Paris, An. 1638. where he was entertained in the quality of a Prince, but without hope of being restored to the Throne of his Fathers; For Sazinofius, or Susneas, immediately upon the victory had possessed himself of the whole Empire; though for a time so terribly disquieted with Treasons and Conspiracies, that in the year 1607. he was fain to sue for aid to the King of Spain, and tender a submission of the Abassine Churches to the Pope of Rome. But the spirit of Rebellion being conjured up, could not so easily be laid down (though there followed a long calm between) but that it brake out again within few years after (that is to say, about the year 1628) more violently then it did before: a powerful Rebel starting up, who followed by an Army of 50000. had questionless dispossessed the Prete of his whole Dominions, if not prevented and discomfited beyond expectation. For it hapned that one Vermile a Frenchman, a Jeweller by Trade, but exercised in the wars of Holland, understanding that the Abassine Emperors was much delighted with the rarities and Jewels of France, found means to convey himself into the Court, where understanding the great danger which that great Emperour was in, and the ignorance as well of the good Subjects, as of the Rebels in the Arts of war, he gat leave to have the disciplining, or training of 8000 men, with which small Army he utterly discomfited and routed that vast body of Rebels, and was thereupon deservedly made Commander in Chief of all the Forces of the Empire. This is the last news of any certainty that hath come from thence: (it being An. 1634. in which that victory was obtained) but that there hath been a report of some new commotions, An. 1648. the particulars and truth whereof must be sought elsewhere.

Yet notwithstanding these disasters, these later Emperours have still preserved their Majesty amongst their Subjects, whom they hold in servitude enough, though they keep not such a distance as in former Ages, Ages; when the Prete was honoured as a God, and used to throw himself but thrice in a year; viz. on Christmas, Easter, and Holyrood day: by which retiredness it was thought that he made his presence more acceptable; some holding nothing to be more derogatory from the Majesty of a King, than to make himself too common an object for the eye of the vulgar. The like kinde of state was once kept by those Kings of France of the first Merovignian line; who withdrawing themselves from all publick affairs, used only to shew themselves (as we have already said) on May-day. A greater retiredness than this, was that which Pellada Queen of the Tentieri (a people of the Rhene) is reported by Tacitus to have used; for when the rest of the *German*s then in arms, sent Ambassadors to her, to inform her of their victory against the Romans, they were prohibited either to speak to her, or to see her; Arcebant aspectu, quo venerationis plus inesse. Such a keeping of state, the polick Prince Tiberius used, when the German Legions mutined; for he daigned not himself to see them pacified, but sent his Son; the reason was; quia majestati major è longinquo reverentia. And no doubt the same keeping of distance wayed much with him, when he forsook Rome, and kept Court privately at Caprea: though I deny not, but a propension to follow his unnatural pleasures the more securely, together with his deformities on his face, had also their powers upon his resolution.

The title of this great and mighty Emperour, (but neither so great, or mighty in power, as title runneth thus: N. N. Supream of his Kingdoms, and the beloved of G O D, the Pillar of Faith, sprung from the stock of Judah, the son of David, the son of Solomon, the son of the Columnne of Sion, the son of the seed of Jacob, the son of the hand of Mary, the son of Nahu after the flesh, the son of St. Peter and Paul after the spirit; Emperour of the higher and lesser Æthiopia, and of the most mighty Kingdoms, Dominions, and Countries of Xoa, Goa, Caffares, Fatigar, Angora, Balignazo, Adea, Vangne, Goyami, where are the Fountains of Nile, Amara, Banguamedron, Ambea, Vangucum, Tigremaon, Sabaim, the birth-place of the Queen of Saba, Barnagassum; and the Lord of all the Regions unto the confines of Egypt.

It seemeth by this title, that these Æthiopian Emperours, however the truth of it may goeth, conceive themselves to be sprung from Solomon, and Maqueda, (or Nizaula, as Joseph nameth her) the Queen of the South. For better confirmation whereof, it is by some reported, that the Arms of this Kingdom are the same with those of the Tribe of Judah, which are a Lyon Rampant in a field Or: and that the Motto of them is to this effect, viz. The Lyon of the Tribe of Judah shall overcome. But Barn, an expert Herald, giveth this Prince no such Coat-armour; his Arms, according to him, being Luna, a cross portate Mars, charged with a crucifix Sol, between two scourges of the second. And yet not altogether to discredit the old Tradition, so generally received amongst them; it may be probable enough, that when the Abassins came into Æthiopia, some of the Sabeans their next neighbours came along for company, and amongst them some of the Royal race of the Queen of Sheba; with some of which, by reason of their great Nobility, some of the Abassine Emperours might think fit to match. Nor is it any matter of impossibility, but that Solomon (considering his course of life) might get a son upon the body of that Queen, from whom the Æthiopian Princes might be thus descended.

As for the Government of these Emperours, it is absolutely Regal, or to say better, perfectly Despotical: the people being treated by them more like slaves than subjects; taking away Signeuries, and giving them unto whom he pleaseth, the deprived party not daring to expresse the least discontent. By them so revered, that it was antiently a custom, if the King were blinde, or lame, or maimed, for the subject to inflict on his own body the like impression: still had in so much honour by the greatest subject, that at his bare name they bow their bodies, and touch the ground with one of their fingers; and reverence his Pavilion as they pass by, though he be not in it. He on the other side, seldom appeareth to his subjects, but with his Crown upon his head, and a Silver-Crucifix in his hand; his face then covered with a piece of Watchet-Taffata, which he lieth down, and putteth down, according as he is minded to grace the party with whom he talketh.

As for his Forces and Revenues, some of our late Observators speak nothing but wonders. Some say his Empire reacheth from the Red-Sea to the Atlantic Ocean, and from one Tropic to the other: Some, that he is of so great Riches, that he is able to purchase a moiety of all the world; if it were to be sold; others, that he is able to raise for any present service, a Million of men. And he himself is said to have offered to the Portugals, one Million of money, and another of men, if they would employ it in a war against the Infidels. But notwithstanding these great brags, I cannot think this Emperour to be such a Miracle, as some of these Reports have made him. For they that speak most knowingly of his Revenues, affirm that the ordinary expences of his Court and Army being discharged, he coffereth up but three Millions of Crowns per annum; which is no great matter: and upon extraordinary emergencies of war and trouble, will be easily waited, or brought into a narrower compass. And yet to make up this Revenue, besides the Crown Lands, or Demain Imperial, he layeth some Tax, or other upon every house, receiveth the tenth of all that is digged out of their Mines; and levieth on the great Lords the Revenue of any one of their Towns, which he pleaseth to chuse, so it be not that in which the Lords themselves inhabit.

This though it be no great Intrado, considering the large extent of his Dominions, and form of his Government; yet it is greater in proportion than his Forces are. For notwithstanding the report of Alvarez, and his own great brag, of raising a Million of men for present service; it is well known that he was never able to advance half that number, in his greatest necessity; and amongst those whom he can raise, there are but few who can deserve the name of Souldiers. For the people being poor and beggerly, and brought up in a servile and base condition; are naturally destitute of that courage and alacrity of spirit, which should be in men professing Arms, or fit for noble undertakings; and are besides, on certain jealousies of State, so diffused from war, that they know not how to use their weapons when there is occasion.

sion. So that for my part I consider him as a weak and impotent Prince, of no authority, or influence out of his Dominions; nor able to defend himself from the continual incursions of his Neighbours (some of them mean and petit Princes) which lie nearest to him. Land-locked on every side from Traffick and Commerce with the Seas; incroached upon Nothward by the Turks; confronted on the West, by the King of Borneo, who possesseth not a tenth part of the Land of Negroes; on the East, continually bearded and baffled by the King of Adel, sometimes a Vassal of his own; and on the South, with the Galle, a barbarous Nation of the other Æthiopia, who lay all waite before them wheresoever they come; and finally in these later times by his own Subjects also. Injuries not to be indured, had he power to help it.

But the chief Stay of this Estate, is an Order of Knighthood, entituled by the name of St. Antony, to which every Father that is of the Degree of a Gentleman, is to destinate one of his sons, if he have above two, but not the eldest. And out of these they cull about 12000 Horse, which are to be the standing Guard of the Emperours person: their Oath is, To defend the Frontiers of the Empire, to preserve Religion, and to make head against the Enemies of the Faith. The Abbots of this Order (for it is partly Religious, partly Military) live in the Mountain of Amara; where they have two Monasteries; as well for the training up of these Knights in the time of their youth, as their retirement, when grown old and discharged from service.

The Arms of this Empire we have seen before.

And so much for ÆTHIOPIA SUPERIOR.

OF ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR.

ÆTHIOPIA INFERIOR is bounded on the East, with the Red-Sea, (that name extending from the bottom of the Gulf of Arabia, to the Southern Ocean) on the West, with the Æthiopic Ocean; on the North, with Terra Nigritarum, and the higher Æthiopia; and on the South, where it endeth in a point or Corner, with the Main Ocean parting it from the Southern undiscovered Continent.

It was called Æthiopia for the reason before delivered; Inferior was added for distinctions sake, because somewhat of a lower situation than the other is. By Strabo called Æthiopia Interior, because lying more within the Land, and remote from knowledge than the neerer did: and by late writers for the contrary reason, called Æthiopia Exterior, because situate without and beyond the other.

It comprehendeth all Ptolomies Æthiopia Interior, part of his Æthiopia sub Ægypto, and all those lands to him unknown, which he giveth us under the name of Terra Incognita. The Country so little discovered in those elder times, that we find mention only of some eminent Mountains, as 1 Canchis, 2 Lon, 3 Ziphia, 4 Barditis, 5 Moschi, one only Region known by name, called Agisimba, and of that nothing but the name, and that it was a Province of a large extent. The people not distinguished here, as in other places, by their Tribes and Families; but only by their kind of diet; some of them being called Anthrophagi, from their eating of men, and others Ichthyophagi from their living on fish. Of these, the first inhabited on the Eastern shores, near the Bay of Barbaria; the principal of which had the name of Rapiti: the last on the shores of the Western Ocean, near Magnus Sinus, or the Great Bay; called also from their Western situation, by the name of Hesperii. Nothing else told us of these parts by the Ancient Writers, but that the Lakes or Fens of Nilus, were occasioned by the great abundance of snow, which fell from the Mountains of the Moon: and that in many parts hereof, there were Rhinoceros, Tygers, Elephants, but these last all white.

Such was the face of this Country in those elder days. The Character of it at the present, generally and in brief, is thus given by Aubanus, viz. That it is mountainous in the West, sandy in the midit, and desart towards the East. But for the several qualities of the soyl and people, being of very different tempers; we shall give the better description of them in their several inclosures, than as presented thus in common. In the mean time to take a view of the Hills, and Rivers, of most reckoning in it; the principal of their Mountains are 1 those called Camaberes in the Province of Angola; 2 Luna Montes, formerly accounted for the boundary of both *Æthiopia*s, now found to belong to this alone. A chain of Hills, but known by no particular name, lying under the Tropic of Capricorn; full of sharp Rocks, of an incredible height, and inhabited by a barbarous and savage People: the Valleys underneath of so great a depth, that they seem to emulate the Mountains.

In this Country is the Lake of Zembre, so much renowned for giving birth to the greatest Rivers of the world; though it self but 50 miles in compass. For out of the abundance hereof flow the famous Rivers, 1 Nilus, which passing through some part of this Country, and travelling the whole length of the Assian and Egyptian Empires, endeth its long course in the Mediterranean. 2 Zaire the greatest of all Africa; but unknown to the Antients, which running Westward through the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and taking in the lesser streams of 1 Vamba, 2 Barbela, 3 Coanza, 4 Lelunda, makes many Islands in his way; and at the last by a mouth of 28 miles wideness disgorgeth his full stotack in the Western Ocean. 3 Cuama, which making his passage towards the East, and much increased by the addition of six great Rivers; after a long course of 700 miles (in all which it is navigable) loseth it self in the Indian or Arabian Ocean; and 4 Fluvium Spiritus Sancti, or the River of the Holy Ghost, which shaping a course opposite unto that of Nilus, endeth it in conclusion in the Southern Seas. It is divided most properly into these four parts, that is to say, 1 Zanguebar, 2 Monomotapa, 3 Casraria, 4 Manicongo. Some also add the Country of Aian, subdivided into the two Kingdoms of Adel, and Ades. But these we have ascribed, with better reason, to the other Æthiopia, within the bounds whereof they are wholly situate.

I. ZANGUEBAR.

ZANGUEBAR, or ZANZIBAR is bounded on the East, with the Red-Sea, or the Indian Ocean; on the West, with the Kingdoms of Manicongo, and part of the other Æthiopia; on the North, with the higher Æthiopia only; on the South, with Monomotapa. The reason of the name I find not.

It containeth in it the great Province of Agisimba, placed by the old Writers in Æthiopia Interior, and in so much of the other also as lieth on the South of the River Rapiti; now called Quilimanci, by which parted from the Kingdoms of Adel, and Ades. The Country on both sides of that River, known in old times by the name of Barbaria, giveth to a large adjoining bay the name of Sinus Barbaricus, and was much famed in those elder times, for the best sort of Myrrh: the Myrrha Trogloditica, and Myrrha Barbara, or Barbarica, being used for the same, by some of the Antients; because the Troglodites, and the people of this Barbaria, joyned on one another. Here was also in those elder times a good race of Ginger, of which saith Discorides, Μάκας φλοιὸς ἐν τοῦ ἑλίου ἐν τῷ Βαββαῖν, that it is the Bark of a Tree brought out of Barbaria. Where by the way, the Scholiast, upon that Author, and Pliny in the 12. Book, have been much mistaken; of which the first takes this Barbara or Barbaria for some part of the Indies; the other thinketh that the Myrrha of these parts had the name of Barbara, from the drossiness and coarseness of it.

Mombaza. as if so called only because unrefined. The principal Town hereof called Rapta, by the name of the River, seated not far from the Sea; and by reason of the great Trade of it, esteemed the Metropolis of Barbaria in the time of Ptolemy. A noted Promontory of the same name was not far from hence.

To come again to Zanzibar, as it is now called, the Country is affirmed to be low and fenny, and very much overflowed with unruly Rivers; and withal so full of Woods and Forrests; that for want of passage for the wind, the air is generally (as in all Fenny Countries of the like obstruction) exceeding pestilent. The people of complexion black, and of curled hair; Mahometans on the Sea-coasts; in the In-land parts Idolaters; extremely given to Witchcraft, and Divinations. Naked above the waite, and beneath covered only with the skins of beasts, or some such mingled colour stuffe, as the Scottish Plaid. The Mabrs which dwell on the Sea-coasts, use to adventure on the Seas in little Vessels, sowed together with leathern thongs, and calked with Gum; having no other sails in them than the leaves of Palm-trees. Boats of a slight making, as those used antiently by the Britans, whereof thus the Poet:

Texitur in puppim; casaque induta juvenco
Velloris patiens, tumidum supercunat Amnem.*

Which I finde thus rendred to my hand:
The moistned Oser of the hoary Willow
Is woven first into a little Boat;
Then cloath'd in Bullocks hides, upon the Billow
Of a proud River lightly doth it float.

It containeth in it to the number of 15 Provinces, that is to say, 1 Melinde, 2 Mombaza, 3 Quiloa, 4 Mosambique, 5 Sofala, all along the Coasts; 6 Moehemage, 7 Corova, 8 Calen, 9 Anzuga, 10 Monza, 11 Badin, 12 Mombra, 13 Mombico, 14 Embroe, and 15 Macaos, more within the Land. Of the nine last, not being perfectly discovered, and therefore likely to yield nothing of note and credit, we shall now be silent. But the first six lying upon the shores, or near it, and consequently better known to Merchants, Travellers, and the like Adventurers, shall be surveyed in order as they lie before us.

1. MELINDE is the name of a little Kingdom, on the South of the Realm of Adea, in the Higher Ethiopia, from which parted by the River Raptus, now called Quilimanci: so named from Melinde, the chief City of it, well walled, and feared in a fruitful and delightful soyl; abundantly productive of Rice, Mill, Flesh, Limons, Citrons, and most sorts of fruits; but not well furnished with Corn, the greatest part whereof is brought out of Cambasia, a Province of India. The houses built of lime and stone, after the manner of Europe. The Inhabitants on the Sea-coasts, of Arabian breed, and of that Religion; those of the In-lands, which are of the original Natives, for the most part Heathens. Most of them of an Olive-colour, but inclining to white; the Women generally of as white complexions as in other places; but they have some black people also. And all of them more civil in their habit, course of life, and entertainment in their houses, than the rest of this Country. Great friends unto the Portugals, and befriended by them, ever since the kind entertainment which they gave unto Vasques de Gama; whom they furnished with Pilots to direct him in his way to India, when first discovered by that people, An. 1497.

2. MOMBAZA is the name of another of these perit Kingdoms, of the same nature for the temper of the soyl and people, that Melinde is. So called from Mombaza the chief City of it, situate from Melinde about 70 miles, in a little Island of 12 miles compass; but of good influence on some part of the Continent also. The Isle and City said to have some resemblance unto the Rhodes. The Town about a league in circuit, environed with a wall, and fortified with a Castle; the streets thereof very narrow, but well built, most of the houses being brick, and the Mosques capacious. The King hereof a Mahometan, as are most of his Subjects, and a bitter Enemy of the Christians. For which cause, and upon some discourtesies received from them, the Town was taken by Vasques de Gama, An. 1500. but abandoned again by reason of the unhealthy air, not well agreeing with the constitution of the Portugals. Afterwards having taken in Alibeg and five Turkish Gallies, sent thither, An. 1589. by the Portugal Vice-Roy residing in Goa; there being taken at that time (besides the spoil of the City) all the Turkish Gallies, and in them 23 greater, and as many lesser Pieces of Ordinance. Such of the Turks and Citizens as escaped the slaughter, and had the opportunity of coming to them, yielded themselves into their power, to avoid the fury of the Imbians, a man-eating people, who had before besieged the City; and gathering up such gleanings as were left by the Portugals, devoured the King, and as many of the principal Citizens as they could get into their hands. 2 Ampaza, the second Town of note, was taken by the Portugals, about two years after.

3. QUILOA lieth on the South of Mombaza. The Country rich and pleasant, the Inhabitants for the most part of Arabian Ancestry; of complexion near unto a white: their women comely, sumptuous in attire, and of civil carriage; neat in their houses, which are generally well built and richly furnished. Touching the ordering of this Sex (of whose honour they are very tender) the people of this Quiloa are said to have a strange custom amongst them, more to be mentioned for the rarity than the decency of it: which is the sowing up of the private passages of nature in their female Children, leaving only a small vent for their urine. Thus sowed, they keep them carefully at home, till they come to be married. And she that is by her Husband found to want this sign of her perpetual Virginity, is with all kinde of ignominy sent back to her Parents, and by them as disgracefully received.

It

It took this name from Quiloa, the chief Town thereof, situate in a little Island, but neer the shore, Mosambique, from which parted by a narrow Fryth, opposite to the mouth of the River Corova, by some called Quiloa. First built in the 400 year of the Hegira, by Ali, the son of Sultan Hishen; who not agreeing very well with his other Brethren, because their Mothers were Persians, and his an Abassine, sought new Adventures in these parts, and bought this Island. His Successors grown rich and powerful by the trade of Sofala, extended their Dominions far within the Land: and so adorned Quiloa, the chief Town of their Kingdom, that for sumptuous and magnificent buildings, there were few like it in those parts. Proud of their many good successes they provoked the Portugals, by whom under the conduct of Vasques de Gama, An. 1500. the City itself was taken, the King made a Tributary, and with his leave some Fortresses erected by them in convenient places. Secure and wanton by this means, they pick a quarrel with Abraham, then the King of this Country; whom in the year 1505. they deposed from his Kingdom, and placed another in his Throne, under colour of not paying the conditioned Tribute. For which the Arabians rose in Arms, displaced their new King, demolished their Fortifications, and sent them to learn better moderation in their prosperous Fortunes, An. 1509. The business coming after to composition, the Quiloa covenanted for the yearly Tribute of 1500. Marks of Gold paid unto the Portugals, to live in peace, and quietly enjoy his own without further trouble.

4. MOSAMBIQUE lieth on the South of Quiloa. So called of Mosambique the chief City of it, situate in a little Island, the principal of three; opposite all of them to the mouth of the River Moghincats, and bordering on the Promontory of old called Prassum, spoken of by Ptolemy, and by him made the furthest known place of all this Coast. In the Island there are said to be sheep whose tails are 25. pound weight, as in other places of these Countreys and some parts of Syria; Hens, black in feathers, flesh, and bone; and if fodder, make the water as black as ink, but yet sweeter in taste than any other. Of Pork good store, the more, because the people are for the most part of the Law of Mahomet, by which all Hog-meat is forbidden. The in-land parts more barren, but very populous: so ignorant and rude when the Portugals first came among them, that for a Shirt, a Razor, and a little Bell, they sold fifteen Kine; and then fell out among themselves, who should have the Bell. The Town conveniently seated on a large and capacious Haven, and fortified with a very strong Castle, in the hands of the Portugals: who in their going to the Indies, and returning back, use to call in here, and fit themselves with all things necessary to pursue their voyage. A Town of so great wealth and trading, that the Captain of the Castle in the time of his Government, (which continueth only for three years) is said to say 300000 Ducats for his Lawful gains, out of the Gold that cometh from Sofala. A gain so great, that at the end of his three years, he is to serve for three years more at some place or other of the East-Indies, at his own charge, without any allowance from the King or State of Portugal, and then permitted to return to his native Country. Such of that Nation as are suffered to inhabit here, are enjoined to be married, to the end the Island should be well peopled, and as well maintained; which otherwise perhaps might have few else in it, but the Garrison Souldiers, and the Factors of particular Merchants.

5. SOFALA lieth on the South of Mosambique, from which parted by the River Caama, the greatest River of those parts, and thence extended to the Mountains which they call Manica, by which separated from Monomotapa. So called from Sofala, the chief City of it; situate in a little Island (as the former are) but with great influence on the Land adjoining. Both Town and Island subject unto the power of the Portugals; who have a Fort, the better to secure the Factory by them here erected, one of the richest in the world; the People bringing hither great quantity of Gold (of which they have most plentiful Mines) which they exchange with them for their cloth, and other commodities. It is supposed that the Gold brought into this Town amounteth to two Millions yearly. The supposition so agreeable to all other circumstances, that little question need be made of the truth thereof. Inasmuch as this Country for its abundance of Gold and Ivory, is by some thought to be that land of Ophir, to which Solomon sent; and of this opinion Ortelius in his Thesaurus was the first Author; but in my minde, upon no probable conjectures, and against very strong presumption. For first, Ophir the son of Ishtar, of whom mention is made in the 10. of Gen. vers. 29. and from whom the land of Ophir, in all likelihood took its name, is in the next verse said to have planted in the East: whereas this Sofala is situate South-west from Chaldea; in which the confusion of Tongues, and dispersing of the People, began. And secondly, it is impossible for the Navie of Solomon which lay at Ezion Geber, in the Bay of Arabia, to have spent three years in coming hither, and returning: which we finde to have been the usual time of finishing the voyage to Ophir, 1 King. ch. 10. Ophir then is some part of India; But whether it were the Island of Sumatra, or that of Zeilan; or one of the Molucco's, or the land of Malacca, called by the Ancients Anrea Chersonesus, I dare not determine; considering what worthy men maintain these several opinions.

6. MOEHEMAGE, or MONOEMUG, the only inland Province of any note, hath on the East Mombaza, and Quiloa; on the West, the famous River Nilus; on the North, some part of the Dominions of the Abassine Emperours; on the South, Mosambique. The Country very plentiful of Mines of Gold, yet the People use it not for money; but barter it in exchange with the Portugal Merchants for Silks and Taffatus, with which they use to cloath themselves from the Girdle downwards; Instead of money, they make use of Red Counters, much resembling Glass. Governed by a King of their own, who holds confederacy with the Kings of Mombaza and Quiloa, for the better ordering of their Trade. To whom are also subject a wild and cruel people, called Agas, inhabiting on the Lake Zemba, and the banks of the Nilus; dispersed about the fields in their homely cottages, black, Cannibals, and of an horrible aspect; more horrible than otherwise they would be, by drawing lines upon their cheeks with an Iron-Instrument, and forcing their eye-lids to turn backwards. By the assistance of this people, the Monomotapa. the King of Monomotapa hath hitherto preserved his Estate against the King of Monomotapa: and they themselves by some of their own Leaders did so distress the King of Congo, that they forced him to retire to a small Island, where he hardly escaped a violent and untimely death, most of his people being starved. Of which more hereafter.

Touching the rest of these Provinces, we can say but little; and that little of no great note or certainty; but that they differ for the most part from one another, both in speech and behaviour; each Village under a several King, and each in continual quarrel with its next neighbours; whom if they overcome, they eat. At leisure times they live by hunting, and the flesh of Elephants. And amongst these, but more upon the borders of the Abassine Empire, I place the Galla; a Nationless Nation, as it were, without house or dwelling, without Law or Government; as barbarous and horrid as the Agags (whom some call Jagge or Giacqui) are affirmed to be; who watching their advantages, and joyned together in some Arts of doing mischief, have made of late such desolations in the Countries of the Presbyter-John.

2. MONOMOTAPA.

MONOMOTAPA, BENOMOTANA, or BENOMOTAXA (for by all these names it is called) is bounded on the North, with the River Chama, by which and the Mountain of Magnice, it is parted from Zanzibar; on the West, and South, by the River of the Holy-Ghost, by which separated from Casraria; and on the East, by the main Ocean. So that is almost an Island; said to contain in compass 750 Spanish leagues, or 3250 Italian miles.

The Air hereof is said to be very temperate, and the Country very good and pleasant, yet full of Forests. Well watered, besides the two great Rivers before mentioned, with the Streams of 1 Panamé, 2 Lunga, 3 Arruga, 4 Mangeano, and certain others, which carry gold with them in their sands. By means whereof, it hath not only abundance of Corn, but great store of Pottage; on which they breed infinite Herds of Cattel, and other Beasts very large and great: such store of Elephants, that they kill 5000 yearly for no other reason, but to make Merchandise of their Teeth: their Gold Mines great and small, reckoned to 3000; some in the hills of Magnice, others in the Province of Matuca, and Boro: the places where the Mines are, known without further Art in the discovery of them, by the dryness and barrenness of the soil; as if nature could not hoord up gold in her spacious bosom, but she must need be barren of all good works.

The People are of meane stature, and black complexions; but strong and active, courageous, and of such footmanship, that they run on Horses. Their Apparel Cotton-Cloth, which they make or buy from some other place: their Diet Flesh, Fish, Rice, Mill, and an Oil called Susman. Their Religion, Paganism for the most part; yet they worship not Idols, but believe in one God only, which they call Mozimo; and seem not much averse from the Christian faith, to which one of their Kings was once converted. They punish nothing more severely than Witchcraft, Adultery, and Thief: and in the punishment of Delinquents they use no Prisons, but execute them as soon as apprehended; which is the reason that the Vulgar have no doors to their houses, that being a privilege for the Nobles. They may have as many Wives as they will, but the first the principal, and her Children only to be heirs: the women here very much respected (as a second England) the Emperor himself, if he meeteth any of them in the streets, giving them the way. Not to be married, till their Menstrua or Natural purgations testify their ability for conception; and therefore they solemnize the first Flux thereof with a liberal Feast.

Provinces of most note in it, and adjoining to it, but reckoned as Members of this Empire, are

1. Matuca, rich in Mines of Gold, the Inhabitants whereof are called Botonghi; who though they dwell between the Line and the Tropic, have in the winter such deep snows on the tops of their Mountains, that if they come not speedily down, they are frozen to death.

2. TORRA or BUTUA, extended from the mouth of the River of the Holy Ghost, or di Spirito Santo, to Cabo Corvientes, (Caput Currentium in the Latines) wealthy in far pastures, and great herds of Cattel; more in her unexhaustible Mines of Gold. Most memorable for a large, and in those times an impregnable Fortress, built formerly by some foreign Prince to secure the Mines; built of square stones, and every stone of marvellous greatness, without any sign of cement or other mortar; the walls hereof 25 spans thick, but the height not answerable; over the Gate certain characters written, which the most learned of the Moors could never read. Perhaps the work of some of the Ethiopian or Abassine Emperours, when their power and Empire was at the highest. By the Inhabitants, who conceive it to be a work beyond humane power, it is thought to have been built by Devils: but by those who take Sofala for the Land of Ophir, ascribed to Solomon, though situate 510 miles more Westward than Sofala, by their own account. The Air here very cold, by reason of the sharp blasts coming from the Pole-Antarctic; so much the colder, in that they have no wood, or other fuel, but what they make themselves of the dung of their Cattel.

3. BORO, and 4. QAITICU, both furnished with Gold also in their Mines and Rivers, but not so pure as that of Torra and Matuca; yet such as serves their turn so well, as to spoil all industry: the people here being very careless in providing necessities, which they presume the Moors (I mean the Arabian Moors) will buy them in exchange hereof.

5. INHABAN, governed by a King of its own, but Vassal and Tributary to the Emperour of Monomotapa; the King whereof in the year 1560. was Chritened by Gonsalvo Silveria a Spanish Jesuite by the name of Constantine; his Queen baptized by the name of Mary: but I find nothing of the further progress of Christianity. Touching 6 Matana, 7 Melemba, 8 Quinbebe, 9 Bertece, and 10 Bavagui, five other Provinces of this Empire, I can meet with little but their names.

Cities

Cities of note here are not many, hardly Towns or Villages; the houses being here so thin, that from the border of Sofala to the Fort of Torra, being 510 miles, as before is said, there is no sign of any building either old or new. The principal of those that be, 1 Tongum in the Province of Inhaban, and the Seat-royal of those Kings; memorable for the baptism of the King and Queen, which was there performed. 2 Simbu, supposed to be so called from the Agisimba of Polomy, the chief Town of the Province of Torre, or Baine; distant from Sofala one and twenty days journey, and neighboured by the remains or ruins of the old Fortresses before described. 3 Benomotaxa, where the King or Emperour makes his usual residence; giving this name to the whole Kingdom, but taking it from the King himself, whom they call Benomotaxa, or Monomotapata, the word in their language signifying a King or Emperour.

The King hereof, accounted one of the greatest of Africa, hath under his command, besides the Provinces described, some part of Casraria. Of great riches in regard of his Mines of Gold, which so abundantly supply all the Royal occasions, that he exacteth no kind of tribute from his Subjects, but some certain dayes service in his Works; and from his Nobles gifts and presents, without which none of them are to come before him. His forces great, the multitudes of men considered; but weak for want of skill to train them, and Arms wherewith to fit them for modern service, the Arms they most use being only Darts and Targets. For which cause, (and in regard the people of the subject Kingdoms are so prone to Rebellions, that he is fain to keep the Heirs of the Tributary Kings as Hostages of their Fathers loyalty) he wagem mercenary Souldiers of other Nations, whom he distributeth abroad in his several Provinces: and amongst these it is affirmed, that he hath a strong Battalion of Amazons, a warlike race of women, who inhabit about the Lake of Zambre, and the out-skirts of Zanzibar; compared by some for their fidelity and prowess, to the Turkish Janizaries. And yet not trusting wholly to the faith of these Mercenaries, it is said that he keeps 200 Mastives for the Guard of his person. Much revered by his Subjects, by whom he is served upon the knee; and when he cougheth or drinketh, all those that are about him make such a shout, that the Town rings of it. In one particular they differ from most Nations else, which is, that such as are admitted into his presence are bound to sit down, in token of reverence; to stand before him, being a sign of the greatest dignity, which can be afforded unto any. Once in a fair way to have advanced Christianity in his Dominions, when in the year 1560. the King hereof was baptized by Gonsalvo the Jesuite, by the name of Sebastian, that being the name of the King of Portugal then reigning. But afterwards on the suggestions of some Arabians then in great place about him, having caused the Jesuite to be slain, he was warred upon by the King of Portugal with an Army of 1600 men, under the conduct of Francisco Barreto; to whom he offered very honorable amends for the injury done: But Barreto having in hope swallowed all the Gold in the Country, would not admit of any peaceable agreement; but referred the business to a battle; in which being overcome himself, and his whole forces not long after consumed by sickness, the hopes of Christianity, and the Portugals interest in that Kingdom, fell together with him.

3. CASRARIA.

CASRARIA is bounded on the East, with Ria di Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; on the South, and West, with the main Ocean; on the North, extended to some parts of Manicongo, and the Province of Zanzibar. So called from the word Casra, which in the Arabian tongue signifieth an Heretic; a name by them given to Christians, Heathens, and those of their own Religion also, which differ in opinion from them; but given to this Region by some late Writers, because destitute of another name.

The Country, for so much of it as hath been discovered, is said to be full of great Herds of Cattel, and flocks of Sheep, abundance of Deer, Antilopes, Baboons, Foxes, Hares, Ostriches, Pelicans, *Heron*s, Geese, Ducks, Pheasants, Partridges; in a word all things necessary for the life of man, were it somewhat better stored with Corn. Exceedingly well watered, and as liberally stored with Woods, and Forests: the Hills thereof intermix with glassie Vallies, that pity 'tis so beautiful and rich a Country should be inhabited by so barbarous and rude a people; who being utterly unprovided of towns and houses, live in woods like beasts. Of colour black, thick lips, flat noses, long-shaped heads, and most monstrous ears; extended far beneath their shoulders, by hanging in them Iron-chains, Glass, Butlers, Bells, and such ponderous bables. These Ornaments common to both sexes, who also use (for their greater beauty) most hideously to dash themselves in all parts of their bodies, even their very bellies; as if no lace could better fort with their naked skins; with which only, except some flap of an Hide, or other leather to hide their privities, they are here apparelled.

Their best habits for the most part are the Hides of Beasts, undressed, unfashioned, just as they tear them from the flesh; but when they cloath themselves with Sheep-skins, they have so much wit as to wear their fleece next to their bodies in cold weather, which at other times they expose (with no small pride and glory) to the open view. Their voice so inarticulate, that it is hard to be distinguished into words and syllables; which being compared with that brutishness, which commonly appeareth in all their actions, makes it hard to say, whether the people generally may be thought to be men in the skins of beasts, or beasts created in the likeness and shape of men. But they make a greater use of their Cattle, than for Garments only, their raw flesh serving them for food, and the Guts for Ornament, which hang about their Necks, uncleaned, and with all the filth in them, in as great a bravery as Ropes of Pearls, or Chains of Gold in more civil Countries. Gold here so vilified, that they exchange it gladly for Brass, or Iron, and that not only quantity for quantity, and weight for weight, but in such senseless disproportion, as rendreth Brass and Iron the more excellent metals.

But

Manicongo.

But amongst all the several Nations which inhabit this most flourishing Country, none are more barbarous than those whom they call the Imbians, dwelling not far from the Cape of good Hope; tall, square, and strong, addicted always to War and Rapine, and feeding on the flesh both of their conquered Enemies, and their dying Friends, whose death they hatten for the Shambles; The skulls of whom they use for their drinking Cups. Their Weapons poisoned Arrows, and Poles burnt at the end: And in their Wars they always carry fire before them, menacing thereby to roast, or boyl all such as they overcome. Their King (if such a sacred name become such an impious Monitor) they account for Lord of all the Earth; as the Portugals, of all the Seas: and he with the old Giant-like Arrogance, not only threateneth the destruction of men, but shooerth his poisoned Arrows against Heaven it self, as often as the rain or heat offends him. In the year 1589. about 80000 of them made an inroad into Zanzibar, laid desolate all the Country as far as Mombaza, which City they besieged, sacked, and devoured the people of it; which Tragedy we have heard before, in our description of Mombaza, a Realm of Zanzibar.

Towns here are none, scarce so much as houses; and those so mean that they deserve not to be so called: except it be some sheds on the Sea-sides, for the use of Saylor's. Of most note in it is, Soldania, a large and capacious Road, about fifteen or sixteen Leagues on the North-West from the Cape of good Hope: not so much noted for the buildings adjoining to it (if there be any such) as the Bay it self; environed on all sides with a pleasant Country, enriched with variety of Herbs, not only pleasing to the sense, but very Medicinal for many diseases, especially for those that are troubled with the Scorbute (or Scurvy, as we use to call it); the Hills adjoining, stored with great multitudes of Cattle, both Sheep and Cows, though less in size than those in these Northern parts: great helps unto our Sea-men in their Eastern-voyages; for here such as are to sayl towards the Indies, use to rake in fresh water, and make provision of things necessary for so long a voyage. I have heard that some of our English ships in their return from the East-Indies, seized on two Savages, living near this Bay, whom they brought on ship-board, with an intent to carry them into England, to the end that having learned the English tongue, we might be more particularly informed by them of the Estate and Affairs of this Country. One of these who was called Goore, being brought to London, (for the other died upon the way) was diered and cloathed according to the English fashion, gratified also with brass Rings, Beads and such other things, by which they thought they might most gain upon him to affect the change of his condition. But home is home, though it be but homely, as the saying is. For this poor wretch having learned so much English as to bemoan his own misfortunes, would throw himself upon the ground, and cry out with great anguish and vexation of spirit, Goore home go, Soldania home go, Goore home go; out of which unquietness of humor, when they could not get him, they sent him back in the next ships which were bound for the Indies. After which time, as oft as he saw any ship with English colours, he would very joyfully make towards the Bay with Guts and Garbage hanging about his neck (as their custom is) and readily perform all good offices towards them; yet so that it was found withal, that by discovering to the Natives how low esteem the English had of Brass and Iron, they thenceforth raised the value of those richer Metals, which formerly they had parted with for such sorry trifles, as have been spoken of before.

But that which is of most consideration in all this Country, is the Cape it self; discovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Bartholomew Diaz, in their first Indian undertakings; by whom, for the continual Tempests which he found about it, it was first called Tormentosa. But afterwards the Portugals having doubled the Cape, and thereby finding good hopes of a prosperous voyage, they caused it to be called Cabo di Banna Speranza, or the Cape of good Hope: Vasques di Gama, the first discoverer of this way to the wealth of India, being then their Admiral, An. 1597. It consisteth of three great points or head-lands, of which that which is neerest us, is the Cape of good Hope: the middlemost hath the name of Cabo Falso, because mistaken for the other, by some of the Portugals, returning homewards; the third called Cabo della Guglia, or the Cape of Needles, by reason of those sharp points which shooer towards the Sea. On the top of the Cape, a large and pleasing plain, adorned with great variety of flowers, and covered with a carpet of grass; it is called the Table of the Cape, and yieldeth a large prospect over the Sea on all sides. The Sea here is very rough and tempestuous, and hath to the Spaniards proved oftentimes very unkind: whereupon a Spanish Captain being fore vexed with a storm, expostulated with GOD, why he suffered his good Catholicks to endure such torments; and permitted the English Hereticks, and Blasphemers, to pass so easily.

The Country is not subjected to any one Prince, the Natives being governed by the Chiefs of their several Clans; nor find I hitherto that either the Portugals, or Spaniards, have took possession of any one part of it, in the name of the whole. So that for ought I know, the best title to it doth belong to the King of England; for whom possession was taken of it in the reign of King James, by one Captain Fitz-Herbert, who called the Ascet unto the Table King James his Mount. But whether this Act of his beget any good title, or whether the title of a Country lying so far off be held worth the owning, I leave to be determined of by Lawyers and Statesmen.

4. MANICONGO.

MANICONGO is bounded on the South, with Casraria, and the Mountains of the Moon; on the West, with the Aethiopic, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Realm of Bein, and other parts of the Land of the Negroes; and on the East, with Zanzibar, and some part of the Abissine Empire. So called from Congo or Manicongo, the principal of those many Kingdoms which are united in this Name.

The

The Air hereof so temperate, that their Winter is like the Autumn in Rome; inasmuch as the people do not use to change their garments, or make more fire then, than at other times: the tops of the Mountains free from cold, and the nights so equal to the dayes, that for the greatest part of the year there is little difference; the Countrey being situate under the Egnator, though more of it on the North than the South thereof. Not over-hot notwithstanding in the heats of Summer, by reason of the cool windes which then blow continually; and the great dewes, which falling in the night make some compensation for the extreame fervour of the day. The soyl so exceeding fruitfull in the production of herbs, plants, fruits, and such store of Pasturage; that they have here great herds of Cattel, large flocks of Sheep, plenty of Goats, Stags, Deer, Hares and Conies: Elephants of that bigness, that their teeth weigh 200 pounds; and Serpents of so vast a bulk, that they will eat a whole Deer at once; not to say any thing of their Fowl, both wilde and tame, which they have here in great abundance.

The people of mean stature, black of complexion, thick lips, and having the apple of the eye of divers colours, which makes them ghastly to behold; strong and long-lived, with very little hair on their heads, but that all naturally curled. In Religion for the most part Heathens, some worshipping the Sun and Moon, others the earth, as the Mother and Nurse of all things; and some again, wilde Beasts and Serpents. So populous, that without any sensible diminution of their infinite numbers, it is supposed that they sell 28000 Slaves to the Portugals yearly; by whom they are sent into Brasil, there to work in the Mines and Sugar-houses. The Christian faith admitted in some few of their Provinces, but specially in that of Congo; where first preached, in the reign of John the 24. King of Portugal, An. 1490. by Gonzalvo de Sufa; who having converted and baptized the Kings Unkle, and one of his Sons, prevailed so far upon the King, that in the end he and his Queen, and many of his principal Subjects, did embrace the Gospel. Received there by the people with such infinite joy, that when their first Bishop came to live amongst them, they caused the wayes from the Sea-side to the City of Banza (being 150 miles) to be covered with Mats; and offered to him all the way as he went, Lambs, Chickens, Kids, Partridges, Fish, Venison, and other necessities, to testify their joycings in that happy change. And though many of the Subjects in the other Provinces were baptized accordingly, and for a time embraced the Faith; yet after some small trial of it they relapsed to their former Heathenism; either unable, or not willing to conform to so strict a Rule.

Principal Rivers of this Countrey, 1 Bengo, 2 Coanza, 3 Dande, 4 Barbela, 5 Ambrizi, 6 Loza, 7 Zaire. This last the greatest of them all, if not of all Africk also: Of which, though we have spoke already, we shall add this here, That it falleth into the Aethiopic Sea with so great a violence, that for ten miles commonly, for fifteen sometimes, the waters of it do retain their natural sweetness; not intermingled nor corrupted with the salt Sea-waters. Nor can the people sayl above five miles against the stream, by reason of the Cataracts, or huge falls which it hath from the Mountains; more terrible and turbulent than those of Nile. And for the Mountains of most note, they are 1 Sierra Compida, or the Long Mountain; 2 Mons Crystalli, or the Crystalline Mountain, so called from the abundance of Crystal, which is found therein; 3 Sierra de Sol, the Mountain of the Sun, of excessive height; 4 Montes Sal Nitri, so called from the abounding in that kinde of Mineral; and 5 the Mountains of Cabambe, rich in Mines of Silver.

It containeth in it many large and ample Provinces, of which we have this general muster in the stile Imperial; wherein their King calleth himself King of Congo, Bamba, Sango, Sandi, Banga, Batti, Pemba, Abundi, Matana, Quisoma, Angola, and Cucango; Lord of the Congemets, Amozale, Languelungi, Anzichib, Cacchi, and Zanghi. Many of these not so well discovered, as to afford us any matter fit for our discourse; the principal of those that be, are,

1. ANGOLA, bounded on the South, with Casraria; on the North, with the Provinces of Bamba and Pemba; on the East, with some part of Zanzibar; on the West, with the main Atlantick Ocean. The Countrey rich in Mines of Silver, and most excellent Copper; some store of Kine and Horses brought out of Europe, which they kill rather for their tails, (the wearing whereof is held for a special ornament,) than keep for any other use: their chiefest diet being Dogs, which they fat for the Shambles; and to that dainty so affected, that at the first coming of the Portugals thither, they would give twenty slaves and upwards for a good large Dog. By this we may conjecture somewhat at the nature of the people, who besides this, are said to be much given to soecery, and divinations by the flight of Birds, skilful in medicinal herbs and poisons, and by familiarity with the Devil, able to tell things to come. Permitted as most Pagans are, to have as many wives as they will; who with the rest of the women, whether maids, or widows, use at the first sight of every New-Moon to turn up their bare bums in defiance of her, as the cause of their troublesome purgations.

In this Countrey are the Mountains called Cantaberes, rich in Mines of Silver; but those Mines not suffered to be digged, for fear of drawing some unnecessary war upon them: so that they use Glasses for Money, and therewith also do adorn the persons of greatest eminence. Their principal City called Cabazza, is about 150 miles from the Sea, and the Royal residence of their Kings; but not esse observable.

This Countrey was first discovered by the Portugals, under the conduct of Diego Can, Anno 1486. the King hereof at that time Vassal unto him of Congo, and so continued till that King did embrace the Gospel: whereupon they revolted from him, and have since subsisted of themselves without such dependence. At first they held good correspondency with the Portugals, and allowed them free Traffick in their Dominions: But after their revolt from the King of Congo, with whom the Portugals were in league, they put to death as many of them as they found in Cabazza, An. 1578. under colour of some pretended pretended treason. To be revenged of this foul murder, Paul Diaz, Governour of these parts for the King of Portugal, arming such people as he had, with two Gallies and some other Vessels passed up the River of Coanza, waiting the Countrey on both sides. Against whom the King of Angola raised an Army of a Million of men (as some Writers tell us:) but amongst those multitudes of men, there were so few Souldiers, that an handful of the Portugals, aided with some of the Forces of the King of Congo, gave him a notable defeat, An. 1582. Since that, the Trade with Portugal was revived again, and the King hereof hath expressed some good affections unto Christianity; sending unto the King of Congo for some Priests to instruct him in it, but obtained them not; the State of Religion in that Kingdom being then declining. The Portugals having thus gotten the upper hand, built, or repaired a strong Fort, situate near a convenient Bay, by which they did not onely secure their Trade, but command a great part of the Countrey, till dispossessed thereof by the treachery and falshood of the Hollanders, An. 1640. or thereabouts: For the Portugals having withdrawn themselves from the Crown of Spain, a Cessation from all Hostility with them, was proclaimed in Holland, and not long after a firm peace made between the Nations; in the Articles whereof it was conditioned, that this peace should not begin in the East-Indies, till the end of the year, nor in Brasil, till the end of half a year from the making thereof. Which being obtained, they gave order to their Fleets and Forces which were abroad, to make themselves Masters of any thing then belonging to the Portugals, which they could lay hold on, who following these instructions, and Anchoring near the Fort of Angola, were by the Portugals received with joy into the Castles as their special friends, which presently they possessed themselves of, turning the poor Portugals in a very weak Bark to seek new adventures. But of this more hereafter in the Isle of St. Thomas.

To this King belong also the two Provinces of Matana, and Quisima, though both used in the titles of the King of Congo: of which the first lying towards the Sea, is said to be of a wholsom air, and a fertile soil; outwardly furnished with fruits, and inwardly with Mines of Chrystall and other metals; but not very rich, for want of some convenient Haven to bring on commerce. The other lying towards a great Lake called Aque Lunda, was once governed after the manner of a Common-wealth; but tributary at that time to the King of Congo, as of later times to the Kings of Angola, by whom brought under this new yoke, by reason of the aid they had given the Portugals in their wars against him.

2. BAMBA hath on the South the River of Coanza, by which parted from Angola; on the North, the River Ambrize, by which divided from Songo; on the East, Pemba; on the West, the Ethiopic, or Atlantick Ocean. The Countrey rich in Mines of Silver, well stored with Beasts and Birds, as well tame as wilde. Amongst the Birds, Parrets both green and gray, and many which are taught to sing; not much as wilde. Amongst the Beasts of most note, is that called the inferior for their musk to the birds of Canaries. Amongst the Beasts of most note, is that called the Zebre, shaped like a Mule; but from the ridge of the back to the belly so streaked with lines of white, black, and yellow, and those streaks naturally set in such even proportion, as yieldeth to the eye a most pleasing object. But wilde, and of so swift a foot, that Velox ut Zebra, to be as swift as a Zebre, is grown into a Proverb amongst the Portugals. The men so strong, that it is said of them, that at one blow they will cut off the head of an Ox, or strike a Slave quite thorow the middle, into two pieces; and to be able to carry in their arms a Vessel of wine, weighing 325 pound weight, containing the fourth part of a But; and hold it so till it be quite drawn out. It containeth in it many Signories, most of them called by the names of their principal Towns. The chief of which, 1. S. Paul, situate on the Sea-side, opposite to the Isle of Loanda; inhabited for the most part by Portugal Families. 2. Bamba, which giveth name to this Province, and is situate about 100 miles from the Sea, betwixt the Rivers of Lofo and Ambrize.

3. PEMBA hath on the West, Bamba; on the East, the Lake Zombre, and the River Barbela; on the North, Batta; and on the South, Angola. Esteemed to be the richest and most pleasant Countrey of all Manicongo; the Fields in all parts thereof beset with Palm-trees, but intermixt with other fruit-trees, which are alwayes green. The water of so good a nature, that it never hurteth any that drink of it: the Aire exceeding wholsom, and the earth as fruitful; productive of all sorts of grain, but specially of that which they call Luco, in form like mustard-seed, but bigger, which they grinde in an hand-mill, and make thereof a Bread not inferiour to Wheat. The people much reclaimed from their ancient Barbarism since the coming of the Portugals thither; whom they imitate both in behaviour and apparel. So well skilled in the vertues of Medicinal herbs, that every one is his own Physician, Chirurgian, and Apothecary. Anciently clothed with Mats, and trimmed up with Feathers; retained still by the Villagers and poorer sort, in some part of the Countrey. Their chief City, formerly had the name of Banza, so called, because the Kings Court (as the word doth signifie,) but since the receiving of the Gospel it is called S. Savours: distant from the Sea 150 miles, beautified (since it became Christian) with a Bishops See, and a fair Cathedral, in which are 28 Canons, with other Officers, and Ornaments accustomedly belonging to the like Foundations. The Town it self situate on the side of a large and lofty Mountain; on the top whereof is a spacious Plain, two Dutch miles in compass, full of Villages, Burroughs, and scattered houses; which are thought to have 100000 persons, most of them Portugals, and their Servants.

4. BATTA hath on the West, and South, Pemba; on the East, the Mountains of the Sun, and those called Sal nitri; on the North, Pango. Of the Soil and people there is nothing singular to be said, but that the Inhabitants hereof are more military, and better furnished for the Wars than the rest of these Provinces: necessitated thereunto by the ill neighbourhood of a fierce and savage people, dwelling about the spurs and branches of the Mountains before mentioned, whom they call Jaggas or Giacchi. These naturally and originally of the Land of Negroes, abandoned the parts about Serra Leona, where before they dwelt, and to the number of 12000 fell into the Mountainous parts of this Region, under the conduct of one Elombe, where they are since grown into a people, and become a terrour to their neighbours. Greedy devourers of mans flesh, which they prefer before that of Beeves, or Mutton; nor yet so qualified by the change of their Countrey, as to build houses, sow or plant, or to breed up Cattell; finding it far the easier life, to maintain themselves by the labour and spoil of others. And which is yet most strange of all, though they have each of them many wives, ten or twenty a piece, yet they have no children, but strangle them as soon as born, lest they should be an hinderance to their often wandrings. But as Pliny once said of the Esseni, Gens aeterna est in qua nemo nascitur; so we may also say of these, that they do not want succession, though they breed no children: selecting out of their Captives and stolen children, some of either Sex, (but neither steal nor take them captive, under twenty years old) to be the Seminary (as it were) of a new posterity. Against these Monsters those of Batta are armed continually, not otherwise able to defend themselves, their wives and children, from their hands and teeth: inasmuch as this one Province, though none of the biggest, is able to raise 70000 men, well armed, and fit for any service. The principal of their Towns is Batta, which gives name to the Province; situate on the banks of the River Leanda, and the Seat of the Vice-Roy; who is alwayes of the blood Royal, honoured sometimes with sitting at the Kings own Table, which none else may do, and of so great authority in all consultations, that no body dares to contradict him.

5. PANGO, is bounded on the South, with Batta; on the East, extended to the Mountains of the Sun, which close up this Countrey; on the North, with Sunda; and on the West, with parts of Pemba, and Songo. Of the people, little singular, of the Countrey left. Neighbourd on the North-east towards Sierra de Christall, with the Languelungi, supposed by some to be the Ethiopes Hesperii, spoken of by Ptolomy; a barbarous Nation, but of so considerable power, that they are found amongst the rest in the Stile Imperial. This once a Kingdom of it self, not subject till of late times to the Kings of Congo. The chief Town of it called Pango, is seated on the Western bank of the River Barbele; the ordinary residence of the Vic-Roy, and the name-giver to the whole Province.

6. SUNDA, is bounded on the South, with Batta; on the North, with the great River Zaire; on the East, with Barbele; and on the West, with part of Songo. The Countrey rich in several Metals, but the Inhabitants prefer Iron before any other; because it doth afford them Materials for Swords, Knives, and Armour; well furnished also with Martrons, Sables, and other Furs of great esteem amongst Foreign Merchants. This is the best Region of this Kingdom, not above 40 miles in breadth, betwixt Batta and the River of Zaire; nor much more in length. Their chief City hath the name of Sunda, which is common careth to the whole.

7. SONGO, is bounded on the East, with Batta, and Anzichana; on the West, with the Ethiopic, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North, with the Kingdom of Loanga; and on the South, with the River Ambrize, by which parted from the Realm of Bamba. It lieth on both sides of the great River Zaire, which is here so turbulent and broad, and so full of Islands, that the one part of it hath little or no commerce with the other. The chief Town hereof called Songo, gives this name to the Countrey; in which is nothing singular for the Soil or People.

8. ANZICHANA, hath on the West, part of Songo and Loanga; extended thence unto the East, as far almost as the Lake of Zembre; on the North, some part of the Land of Negroes; on the South, the Zaire. So called from the Anziqui, the Inhabitants of it: The cruellest Cannibals in the world; for they do not onely eat their Enemies, but their Friends and Kinsfolk. And that they may be sure not to want these Dainties, they have Shambles of mans flesh, as in other parts of Beef or Mutton. So covetous withall, that if their Slaves will yield but a penny more when sold joyn't by joyn't, than if sold alive; they will cut them out, and sell them so upon the Shambles. Yet with these barbarous qualities they have many good. Affirmed to be so cunning at the Bow and Arrows, that they will discharge 28 Arrows (for so many do their Quivers hold) before the first of them falls to the ground: and of so great fidelity to their Masters, and to those which trust them, that they will rather choose to be killed, than either to abuse their trust, or betray their Master: For that cause more esteemed by the Portugals, than their other Slaves. And for the same and that onely, worthy of so good a Countrey; said to be rich in Mines of Copper, and very plentifull of Sanders, both red and gray; which tempered with Vinegar, is found by the Portugals to be a certain remedy against the Pox; as the smok thereof against the head-ache. Towns they have none, or none at least of any reckoning, which deserve place here.

9. LOANGO hath on the East, Anzichana; on the West, the Ethiopic, or Atlantick Ocean; on the North, Benin, one of the Realms of Guinea, in the Land of Negroes; and on the South, the Province of Songo, from which parted by the River Loanga, whence it hath its name. The Countrey very hot, as lying under the Line, but well peopled, indifferently fruitful, and more stored with Elephants, than any other of these parts; stretching in length 200 miles within the Land, and for the most part very well watered. The Inhabitants, whom they call Bramas, by Religion Heathens, but of old accustomed (as the Anziqui and other of these barbarous Africans) unto Circumcision. Governed by a King of their own, once subject to the Kings of Congo: but of late times, both he and the King of the Anziqui (for they are also under the command of one Sovereign Prince) have freed themselves from that subjection: though still the King of Congo be called King of both. Their King they call by the name of Mani Loanga. Their Towns of note, 1. Penga, the Haven to the rest. 2. Morumbia, 30 Leagues more Northwards, and within the Land; the Inhabitants of which Towns, being more civil than the rest, apparel themselves with the leaves of Palm-trees; but not so well skilled in the nature of that excellent Tree, as the more civilized people of the Realms of Congo, who out of the leaves thereof well cleansed and purged draw a fine long thred, of which they make Velvets, Damasks, Satens, Taffaties, Sarcenets, and the like fine Stuffles.

10. Having thus looked upon the chief Provinces of this Kingdom seated on the Continent, let us next look upon the Islands. The principal of which LOANDA, situate over against the Town of S. Paul, in the Province of Bamba, said to be first made out of the sands of the Ocean, and the mire of Coanza, cast into an heap, and at last made into an Island. Now beautified with a very fair Haven, of the same name with the Island, possessed by the Portugals. The Island deitute of Rivers, but so well furnished with waters, that every where within less than half a yard digging, they finde sweet and good Waters, so contrary to the Sea from whence they come, that when the Sea ebbs from it, they be salt and brackish; when it floweth towards the Island, then most fresh and sweet. But most remarkable is this Island for the Cockle fishing, which the Women going a little into the Sea, rake up together with the sands, in baskets, and part them from the sand, as they lie on the shore; the shells of which being naturally distinguished into divers colours, serve over all the Kingdom of Congo, instead of money; which is a matter of such moment unto this King, that he entertains a Governour in the Island for no other reason, but to take care about this fishing.

Besides this, there are many Islands in the River of Zaire, now subject to the Kings of Congo, but heretofore in continual Wars against them: fighting in Boats which they made of the bodies of a Tree, by them called Liconde. The tree so big, that two or three men or more are not able to fathom it: insomuch that many times a Boat is made of one of the largest of them, able to contain 200 men. Upon the shores of these Islands, and in others of their Bays and Creeks, they have so great numbers of Anchours, that in winter time they will leap upon the Land of their own Accord.

Compacted of these several Members, and of the rest expressed in the Stile Imperial, is the Realm of Congo: so called from Congo the chief Province, but now distinguished from the rest by the name of Pemba; which being of more power, or of better fortune, than any of the other, or of all together, hath given both Law and Name unto them. Discovered by the Portugals, under Diego Can, An. 1486. at what times these Kings were at the greatest: called by their subjects Mani Congo, or the Kings of Congo, the word Mani signifying in their Language a Prince or Lord; the name communicated since to the Kingdom also. Of their affairs before this time there is nothing certain. What hath since hapned in this Kingdom, may best be seen in the ensuing Catalogue of

The KINGS of CONGO.

- 1486 1 John, not so called till converted to the Faith of Christ; and then baptized by this name, in honour of John the 24. King of Portugal, Anno 1490. in whose reign this discovery and Conversion hapned.
- 2 Alphonso, eldest Son of John, zealous in the advancement of the Christian Faith, and for that opposed by Pans Aquitine his younger Brother: whom with a very small Army, zealously invocating the assistance of Jesus Christ, he is said to have vanquished. A Prince, who during his long reign of 50 years did seriously promote the Gospel, and caused all Idols in his Kingdom to be overthrown: and Churches to be built, and furnished in convenient places.
- 3 Pedro, the Son of Alphonso, in whose time was founded the Colledge of 28 Canons, in the Cathedral Church of S. Crosse, in the Town of S. Saviours.
- 4 Francisco the Son of Pedro, who reigned not long.
- 5 Diego, or James, one of the Kinsmen of Francisco, in whose time Religion growing into discredit, by the scandalous lives of some of the Secular Clergy; John the 34. King of Portugal, sent four Jesuites thither; who are said to have converted in five moneths 5000 persons, and to build three Churches.

- 6 Henry, the brother of Diego, after a sharp War touching the Succession, in which were slain all the Portugals of S. Saviours, except the Priests, at last succeeded: not long after slain in battel against the Arzigues.
- 7 Alvarez, the Son of Henry, forced by the Jaggies or Glacchi to abandon Congo, and betake himself, together with the Portugal Priests, to an Island of the River Zaire: where he continued, till restored to his Crown by the aid of Sebastian King of Portugal, after by famine he had lost almost all his company.
- 8 Alvarez II. Son of Alvarez the first, who much sollicitated Sebastian and Henry Kings of Portugal, to send him a new supply of Preachers; the old store being wasted in the Islands of Zaire.
- 9 Alvarez III. Son to Alvarez the 2d, not being born in Lawfull wedlock, was opposed by one of his Sisters and a younger Brother, both of Lawfull birth; whom he overthrew, Anno 1587. and in the place of the Victory founded a Church in honour of the Virgin Mary.

Touching the Forces and Revenues of these Kings of Congo, I am able to say nothing certain; but that he is a Prince of great power and riches. His Riches visible by the great treasures which he draweth from the Mines of Silver, and of other Metals in his Kingdom; from the trade of Cockle-shells, the onely Money of his Realm, which he keeps wholly to himself; the great gain which he makes by Slaves, and from Elephants Teeth; the Presents which he hath in way of Tribute, from the King of Angola.

Angola. And though it be not easie to say what he layeth up yearly, because he hath not his Revenue in Coin, as most Princes have; yet it is thought that he is as rich and well furnished with all things, as any Monarch in Africa.

As for his Forces, they consist most in the multitudes of his Subjects; which were they well armed and used to the Wars, would make him formidable to the rest of the African Princes. And though he hath no garrisons or Towns of War, but must trust, if once invaded, unto Castles of bones; yet he doth rest secure enough from all fear of danger, except out of Europe: being able to raise against his Rebels, or any of his invading neighbours, 400000 men out of Bamba onely; all armed according to their manner, and 70000 men at least, well exercised in Wars against the Jaggies, from the Province of Batida; besides what may be drawn from his other Provinces.

The Arms of this King are Mars, five Swords meeting in Base Sol: Which Coat was taken by Alphonso, the second King in this Catalogue, because in the battel which he fought against Panse Aquitine, he and his Souldiers saw (or supposed they saw) such a number of shining Swords hanging in the Air, with their points turned directly upon the Enemy.

And so much for Æthiopia Inferior.

Of

Of the ISLES of AFRICK.

IN tracing out the Isles of AFRICK, we must observe another course than that which we have taken in Europe and Asia: these Islands not belonging to any part of the Continent, nor under the command of any great Prince in Africk, in the account of whose Estates they might be considered; but being all of them independent and sui juris, and therefore to be handled by themselves apart. In our Chorography of which, and the stories of them, (as far forth as my Authors will direct me in it) I am now to travel; beginning first with those that lie in the Red Sea, or Indian Ocean, and so proceeding by the Cape of Good Hope, through the main Atlantick Ocean to the Streets of Hercules: that from thence we may have the shorter passage into America, and there ad Diva et Materiam, conclude our journey. These then we will consider either joyn't, or separate, as delivered to us by the names of 1 The Aethiopiack Islands. 2 Socotara. 3 Madagascar. 4 Mohelila. 5 Mauritius. 6 St. Hellens. 7 Ascension. 8 St. Thomas. 9 The Princes Islands. 10 The Island of Ambowen. 11 The Gorgades, or Islands of Cape Verd. 12 The Canaries, or the Fortunate Islands. 13 Madera. 14 The Island of Holy Port, and 15 The HESPERIDES; of all which, the four first onely are dispersed in the Red Sea, or Indian Ocean, all the rest scattered up and down in the main Atlantick, on this side of the famous Promontory, called the Cape of Good Hope.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS.

1. THE ÆTHIOPICK ISLANDS, so called, because they lie upon the Coast of Æthiopia Superior, together with all those which lie on the further side of the Cape of Good Hope, or scattered, or dispersed in the Red Sea, or Indian Ocean (for by those names these mighty Oriental Seas are most commonly known) of which we have spoke more at large when we were in Arabia, and therefore shall say nothing here which concerns the same, but for the Islands of those Seas, such as we comprehend here under the name and notion of Æthiopiack Islands, which were onely known unto the Ancients, they are more in number, than in weight: some of them situate within the Streits of the Red Sea, or the Gulf of Arabia: others without those Streits, in the open Ocean.

Sea, or the Gulf of Arabia: others without those Straits, in the open Ocean.

1. Of those within the Straits, not reckoning such as lie upon the shores of Aravia Felix, of which we have already spoken; there is 1 Afritie, or Alfrata, now called Cassia. 2 Arva Pelladis, so called from some Altar of that Goddess, which was there erected. 3 Gysperis, by Pliny called Cyris, but Gysperis in Justinian's Code, renowned in former times for its plenty of metals. 4 Macaria, or the fortunate Islands, so called from the fertility and pleasures of it. 5 Orneon, or the Isle of Birds, from the great plenty of Birds which was found therein. 6 Daphnis, by Ptolomy called Daphnie, opposite to a famous Port-Town of the same name in the Continent. 7 Bacchias, so called from Bacchus, unto whom consecrated. 8 Anti-Bacchias, so named, because opposite to it. 9 Acanibinis, supposed by some to be now called Anguotina. 10 Insula Diadori, conceived by the Learned to be the same which is now called Babel Mandel, and given name unto the Straits, or entrance of the Bay of Arabia, now called the Straits of Babel Mandel. 11 Isidis Insula, memorable for a Temple dedicated to the Goddess Isis; and for a well frequented Port called Portus Isidis; the same which is now called Pasfua, as Bel-forest thinketh. 12 Mundi, an Island in the Bay of Avalites, opposite to a noted Empory of the same name on the shores of that Bay. Besides all which, we finde in Ptolomy two Islands by the name of Thrisfides; two more, called Chelonitides, or Cathreia, two others passing by the name of Gomidas; together with the Isles of Azyron, Pan, and that called Insula Magorum: which make up one and twenty in all, but of no note, or observation in the course of business, or the conduct of humane affairs.

III. Of such as lie upon the shores of the Red Sea, and in some

Those of most note in the open Ocean, which still preserve the name of the Red Sea, and is sometimes called the Indian, sometimes the Arabian Ocean, and by a particular name Pelagus Hyphasis are but four in number, that is to say, 1. Myrice, by the Translator of Plotom, called Myrfica; 2, 3, two Islands called by the name of Mensan, a degree more Northwards than the other; and 4. Amicufia, as Stephanus; or Amici Infula, as called by Plotom, the most North of all; which I conjecture to be that which is now called by the name of Socotara, the most noted Island of this Sea. I know that many Learned men will have this Island to be that, which Plotom and others of the Ancients call Diocoridis; but because Diocoridis, by all those Ancients, is made to be an Island of Arabia Felix, and Socotara by all the Moderns affirmed to be an Isle of Africa; I can by no means yield unto it. Again, it is affirmed by our best modern Geographers, that Socotara lieth over against Cape Guardafu, (the Armenia of Plotom, as before is said) from which distant not above 30 leagues; which site and distance fort well with Amicufia, but can by no means be applied unto Diocoridis: Amicufia being placed but two Degrees on the East of that Promontory, in the Longitude of 85. whereas Diocoridis is situate from it almost four degrees, in the Longitude of 86. and 40 minutes; belides as great, or greater difference in their several Latitude. So that supposing it for granted, that Socotara is that Island which was anciently called Amicufia; and having cleared my way so far; I now proceed to the Description and affairs thereof.

2. SOCIO-

2. SOCOTARA.

2. SOCOTARA, the greatest Island of these Shores, is situate, as before was said, against Cape Guardafiy, from which distant about 30 leagues; Abadennry, a small Island lying in the middle, that is to say, 15 leagues from the Cape, and 14 from the Island. The length hereof 60 miles, 25 the breadth; divided in the middle by craggy Mountains of great height, the top of which are for the most part covered with sands. The Island extremely vexed with winds, and molested with dryness, inasmuch as it is destitute of most things necessary for the life of man; affording nothing towards it of the growth of the Earth, but some small quantity of Mill, Dates, and some kinde of Fruits. Provided notwithstanding of some good Pastures for the breed of Cattel, and liberally furnished with Medicinal Drugs, as Cinnamon, Dragons blood, which is a red Gum issuing from the bark of a Tree; and the best Aloes in the world, from hence called Aloes Socotrina.

The people of an Affe-colour, very rude and barbarous; their bread for the most part of Dates; the rest of their food being milk and butter; their hair long, and their clothing onely enough to hide their nakedness. The Women as good Souldiers as the Men, countenancing, or occasioning the tradition of the Arabians, that they came from the Amazons; And the better Husbands of the two, governing all affairs both within and without. All of them by profession Christians, governed by a Bishop of their own, with some few Priests; but ignorant enough of all things which concern Religion. More generally Circumcised than Christened, though both used among them. Jaculites in Sett, as the Avassines their Neighbours are; and zealous worshippe: of the Cross, which they alwayes hang about their necks. So pertinaciously addicted unto Magick, and therein so expert, that they bring incredible things to pass: not to be weaned from those black Arts, though the Bishop excommunicate all such as use them. They hold opinion that St. Thomas suffered shipwrack upon their Coasts, as he sayed towards India; and that his Ship being drawn to land, was turned into a Church: but it appeareth neither by their life, or Doctrines, that any Apostolical man hath feet foote amongst them.

They live for the moit part in Cavus, or Cubbins, of no other stufte than the boughs of Trees ; so that we are to look for few Towns among them. The principal. 1 Zocoras giving name to the Iland, the place of the Kings refidence, and a B:shops See. 2 Tamirind, and 3 Delifja, two Port-Towns, and reasonably well traded, in the hands of the Natives: as 4 Coro, and 5 Benin, two other Ports, poffessed and garriſon'd by the Portugals. The King hereof a Vaffal to the King of Ertac, one of the petit Princes of Arabia Felix, not far from Aden; in Habit and Religion Turkiſh: Attended on when the Relater was there, An. 1614. by five Camels and five Horſes onely, yet thoſe all in the Iland.

Nigh hereunto are two Islands, (those possibly which Ptolomy calleth Menan) the one inhabited by men only, and the other by women; who do meet at their accustomed times to preferre their kinde, but make no long stay; the Air of the one being found unhealthy for the continuition of the other Sex. The other Islands of these Coasts, scattered up and down in the Bay of Bambarta, (but not known by any name in the time of Ptolomy) as 1 Don Garcia. 2 The three brethren. 3 St. Brandon. 4 Francis, 5 Mascadenna. 6 Comoro, and many others of as small note, are not worth the speaking of.

3. MADAGASCAR.

3. MADAGASCAR, the greatest of the world, is situate over against Mosambique in Aethiopia Inferior: supposed to be the Menuthias of Ptolemy, the onely Island by him named on the Coast of that Countrey; but by the Portugals called the Isle of St. Lawrence, because discovered by them on the day of that Saint, An. 1506. The length hereof affirmed to be 1200 miles, (which is longer than Italy) and 4000 in compass: the middle part hereof oppolrite to the Promontory, which Ptolemy calleth Prassinus, now the point of Mosambique, from which distant 170 miles: in reference to the Heavenly bodies, situate from the 17 Degree of Southern Latitude, to the 26th.

The Country plentiful of all things necessary for the life of man, particularly of Mill, Rice, Honey, Wax, Cotton-wooll, Sugars, Stags, Goats, Deer, and other Creatures both wild and tame; Limons and other cooling Fruits, some store of Ginger, Cloves, but little different from those of India, red Sanders, Saffron, Amber, and some Mines of Silver, Iron, Gold, and Copper: not to lay any thing of their Beeves and Muttons, so large, and good, and so good eate, that for a two-penny Bead, or some such trifle, they will fell Beeves and Sheep of good taste and bigness: such numbers of Elephants, that they fend thence yearly great store of Ivory. And amongst other rare Fruits, they have plenty of those, which they call Cocos, or Cocconuts; a kinde of Date as big as a Cabbage; the liquor in it, about the quantity of a pint, tastes like Wine and Sugar; the Kernel big enough to content two men: and like good Ale, it affords not only meat and drink, but cloathing; as also furniture for their houses, tackle for their ships, fuel for the fire, and timber for building; the body of the Tree being strait and high, and towards the top diversified into many branches. A Country far too good for so bad a people.

For they, as Travellers report, and most Writers tell, are treacherous, inhospitable, ignorant, both of Prayers and Festivals; destitute of the distinction of time into years and months, not knowing any proper names for the days of the week, nor able to reckon above ten; naked, except their privities, which they cover with Cotton; Idolaters in the mid-land parts, and Mahometans upon the shores. Commendable only for their hate to Polygamy, and retraining themselves to one wife; the defiling of the Marriage-bed severely punished: but otherwise so eager upon copulation, that their Boys at the age of twelve years, and the Girls at ten, think they stay too long, if they keep their Virginities any longer; some some of them, like Quartilla in Petrinus Arbiter, begin to early, ut nunquam meminissent se Virgines fuisse, that they remember not the time when they lost their Maidenheads. Of colour they are black, and of strong composition; their breasts and faces cut and pink, to appear more beautifull. Much given unto the wars, well armed according to their Countrey manner, and exceeding good Archers. Amongst them there are some white people, said to come from China.

It hath in it many fair Rivers, but their names I finde not: and at the mouths of those Rivers some convenient Havens, into which they admit the forein Merchants, but suffer none to come on land; which the Merchant hath no cause to be sorry for, finding himself not safe on shipboard from their treacherous practices. So that we can give but small account of their Towns and Cities, except it be the bare recital of their names: as viz. 1 St. Augustines, on a fair Bay in the South-west point, as 2 Gangamar in the North-east of it; 3 Antabostia. 4 Point-Antogil. 5 Santo-Jacobo. 6 Mututana. 7 Angoda. 8 Elerendo. 9 Andro-arco; and 10 Roma, or New-Rome, so entituled by some zealous Romanists, in hope to have it thought that the Popes of Rome have got some footing in this Island.

This Island known, but very imperfectly, in the time of Marcus Paulus Venetus, who telleth us many strange things of it: but none more strange than that of the Bird called Ruck, of such incredible strength and bigness, that it could snatch up an Elephant as easily as a Kite doth a Chicken. Discovered by the Portugals in the year 1506, as before was said; and since frequented by the English and Holland Merchants: by whom we are informed no further touching the Estate and Affairs thereof, but that it is divided into four parts, under so many Kings, each of them in continual Wars against one another, but well enough agreed to defend themselves against the coming in of strangers. Yet as some say, they would be well enough content with an English Plantation: either in love to our Nation, whom they acknowledge to be more courteous than the Portugals, and not so covetous as the Dutch; or else by the strength of our shipping, and the reputation of our interests in it, to keep off all others.

4. MOHELIA, & 5. MAURITIUS Island.

ADjoyning to Madagascar, and as it were attending on it, I finde divers Islands; some on the North-west, some directly East. On the North-west we have 1 Mottey. 2 Chamree. 3 Mohelia, and 4 Joanna Island; on the East, 5 the Island of Mauritius, and 6 Englands Forrest. Of these Mauritius is the greatest, but Mohelia the best inhabited.

4. MOHELIA situate on the North-west of Madagascar, is about 20 miles in length, and 16 in breadth: abounding in Goats, Hens, Coconuts, Limons, Oranges, Pom-Citrons, Pulse, Sugar-Canes; store of Fish taken on the shores, and other necessities. The people of complexion black, of composition large and strong; courageous, affable, less treacherous than their Neighbours of Madagascar. Of the same Language and Religion with those of Aravia, from whence they seem to have descended; but by reason of their commerce and intercourse with the Portugals, they speak that tongue also. The Women of the like complexion, to amend which, and seem more lovely, they pink their arms and faces in several shapes. Both sexes no otherwise apparelled than their natural Garments, with some Plantane Leaves about their middle to hide their shame.

Their Religion that of Mahomet, as before is said: their Priests in great esteem amongst them; so their Temples also: which they keep clean and neatly matted, not suffering any man to enter with his shoes on his feet. Their chief Town Merianguea, at the West end of the Isle, strong and well garrison'd. Heretofore under the command of one King alone; of late divided into two Principalities; one of the last Kings leaving two daughters, the one married to a Native, the other to an Arabian Lord.

5. Larger than this, on the East of Madagascar, is the Isle of MAURITIUS, so called by the Hollanders in honour of Maurice Prince of Orange, in whose time they first set footing in it; but by the Portugals called De Cerne, and by some Cygnus. In compass about 100 miles; well stored with Beeves, Hogs, Goats, most sorts of Fish; and liberally endowed with all the blessings of Nature, sweet Waters, most delicious Fruits, Woods fit for any use both of food and building; plenty of Ebony of all colours, but the best coal-black. Yet altogether destitute of humane Inhabitants: inasmuch as we may say of this, as the Poet of the World, before man was made:

*Sanctus his Animal, mentisque capacis altus
Deerat adhuc, & quod dominari in cetera possit.*

Which may be Englished in these words:

But yet the Chief, with Supream power posselt,
Was wanting, he that should command the rest.

Of the ATLANTICK OCEAN, and the Isles therein.

HAVING thus looked upon such Islands, as lie on the Eastern side of Africk in the Indian Ocean, let us come homeward by the Cape of Good Hope into the main Atlantick, the greatest body of waters, which is given to us by one name in any of our Cosmographers, either old or new: A name peculiar to that part of the Western Ocean, which lieth between the Streights of Gibraltar, and the Land of Negroes, to which Mount Atlas sheweth it self with a cloudy top, and gives name to the Seas adjoining, but generally communicated to all that vast Region of waters, which lieth between Spain and Africk, on the one side, side, and the new world, or America on the other side: Extended further by Strabo, and some others of the Ancient writers, who not knowing any thing of the interposition of America, carry the name of the Atlantick to the shores of India, which they make to be terminated by this Sea on the East and South. Macrobius goeth further in it, affirming positively, omnem terram, quæ à nobis colitur, Atlantico mari (quod Oceanum appellamus) circumfundit, that the whole habitable world (so far as it was then known, and peopled) was compassed round about with the Atlantick Ocean. The like affirmed by Julius Firmicus also, by Aristotle in his book de Mundo, and by others, who have took it upon their Authority. And though some parts hereof, which wash the Western-shores of Ethiopia Inferior, be called the Ethiopic Ocean; yet that doth derogate no more from the great extent that is given formerly to the main Atlantick, than that some parts of the Mediterranean should be called Mare Siculum, Sardinum, Tyrhennum, Creticum, according to the shores of those several places which it passeth by; which having said in general of the Sea it self, according to our Method in other places, we next proceed unto the rest of the African Islands, which we named before, but could not meet with but in this Sea, and this side of Africa.

6. St. HELENS, and 7. the Isles of ASCENSION.

AND the first Isle we meet with in this side of Africk is 6. the Isle of St. Helens, situate on the West of the Cape of Good Hope, and in the 16 degree of the Southernly Latitude, no other Island interposing betwixt Madagascar and it, except those of Don Alvarez, and of Tisram de Acugna, near the Cape it self; but of so little note, as not worth the naming. The Island very high and hilly, and mounting from the Sea with so steep an ascent, that the Mariners have amongst them a merry saying, that a man may choose whether he will break his heart going up, or his neck coming down.

It was thus called, because discovered by the Portugals on St. Helens day; not then inhabited, nor since, the King of Spain suffering none to dwell there, because it had been an unlawfull receptacle for uncustomed Goods; whereby he lost exceedingly both in Power and Profit. Stored by the Portugals at the first Discovery, with Goats, Hogs, Hens, and other Creatures: as also with Figs, Limons, Oranges, and the like Fruits, which there thrive exceedingly, and grow all the year long. Intended by them for a Stage in their going and coming to and from the Indies: in which they might refresh themselves, and bestow their sick, whence they are taken off by the next years Fleet. Used for the same purpose by the English, and Hollanders, who to domineer about the Island, that the Portugals dare not Anchor near it, or own their Property, if they see any shipping in the Rode. No buildings in it but the ruins of a little Chappel, destroyed by the Hollanders; and some fragment of a little Village begun by some Portugal Mariners, but demolished by the King of Spain.

7. North-west from hence is the Isle of Ascension, so called, because discovered on Ascension day; but not inhabited, nor any use at all made of it for ought I can finde. Of the same bigness with St. Helens, 30 miles in compass, and about 700 English miles distant from it.

8. St. THOMAS, 9. the PRINCES Island, and 10. the Isle of ANNIBON.

THE Island of St. THOMAS is situate directly under the Equator; of Orbicular form, the Diameter being 60 miles, by consequence the Perimeter, or compass 180, and just so many from the shore of the Realm of Congo. At the first discovery nothing but a continual Forest, now very well inhabited both by Portugals and Negroes; these last brought hither from the opposite Continent: with whom the Air agrees so well, that they attain generally to 110 years of age, few of the Portugals unto fifty. The air so vehemently hot, that it fortheth not with the constitution of the Europeans.

The Countrey destitute of Wheat, which if sown here, turneth all to blade, and brings forth no Ear: nor will any fruits here prosper, that have any Stone in them: but so abundant in Sugar-Canes, and well stored with Sugars, that 40 ships are hence loaded yearly with that one Commodity, for making which, they have here 70 Ingenios, or Sugar-houses, and in each of them 200 Slaves, in some 300, which belong to the works. Six dayes in seven these Slaves work for their Masters, and the seventh for themselves; which they spend in sowing and planting their Seeds, Fruits, and Provisions. Whereby the way, these Sugar-works, or Ingenios are a late Invention; the boyling and baking of Sugar (as it is now used) not being above 200 years old; and the refining of it more new than that: first found out by a Venetian in the dayes of our Fathers, who is said to have got above 100000 Crowns by this Invention, and to have left his Son a Knight; who (though he was no Knight of the Post) in very little time brought it all to nothing. Before which Art of boyling and refining Sugars, our Ancestors not having such luxurious Palaces, sometimes made use of rough Sugar, as it came from the Canes; but most commonly pleased themselves with honey, more wholsome, because more natural than these forced inventions. But to proceed in the description of this Island, in the midst thereof there is said to be a woody Mountain, over-shadowed continually with Clouds: which so moisten the Trees that grow there in a great abundance, that from thence falleth a sufficient quantity of waters to refresh their fields, and feed their Sugar-Canes, notwithstanding the extrem heat of the Clime and Air.

The Religion here allowed of is the Christian onely, first preached here by the Portugals, or brought hither with them. The Church hereof governed by a Bishop, his title the Bishop of St. Thomas; but his charge extendeth also over all the Churches in the Realm of Congo. The principal City of it hath the name of Pavafan, a Colony of Portugals, consisting of 700 Families, or about that number: situate on a fine River, and a pleasant Haven: seldom without the company of Portugal Merchants, who bring hither in

The Gorgades, in exchange for Sugars, Wheat, Wine, Cheese, Hides, and other things more necessary than those Sagars, for the life of Man. Took by the Hollanders in the year 1599. but again recovered, or abandoned; and since possessed again by the Hollanders, not as before by force of Arms, but by fraud and falsehood, at the same time, and by the same dishonest Arts by which they made themselves Masters of the Castle of Angola before mentioned. And though the Portugal Ambassador presented this injurious dealing to the States of Holland, yet all the answer he could get at the present was, that their people had done nothing, but what was justified by that clause of the Article, that both sides might take and keep, whatsoever they could within such a time; and though the Ambassador replied very rationally in behalf of his Country, and pretends the restitution both of this Island, and that Cattle, by all honest Arguments, yet he could then get no reason from them; and whether they have done the Portugals any Justice since, as to those particulars, I am not able to determine.

9. THE PRINCES ISLAND, (Insula Principis in the Latine) so called, for that the Revenues of it were allotted to the Prince of Portugal; is situate in three Degrees of the Northern Latitude. The Country very fruitful for the bigness of it; but not much observable: except it be for being taken for the Hollanders by Julian Clerchagen, Anno 1598. abandoned not long after to the former Owner. Attended, as is fit for a Princes Island, by a Mess of Chaplains, viz. 1 the Isles of St. Matthew. 2 St. Croix. 3 St. Paul, and 4 St. Conception: and waited on by seven servants (so many Islands near Cape Verd) all in Coats of Green, called by one common name, Barbacene. But because the former four yield no matter of History, and these last seven have no other Inhabitants but Birds; we may be thought, having said thus much of them, to have said enough.

10. South-west hereof, but on the other side of the Line, lieth the Isle of Annobon, (Insula Annoboni as the Latines call it.) So named, because discovered upon New-years-day. Inhabited, and of very good fishing all along the Coasts of it; but that fishing made unsafe by Crocodiles, and other venomous and hurtful Creatures, which are said to be about the shores in great abundance.

11. The GORGADES, or Isles of CAPE VERD.

11. THE GORGADES, or Islands of Cape Verd (Insula Capitis Viridis, as the Latines call them) are 9 in number; called by the last name, because situate over against Cape Verd (Promontorium Capitis Viridis) in the Land of Negroes. Their names, 1 St. Anthony. 2 St. Vincent. 3 Buenavista. 4 St. Lucies. 5 Insula Salis, the Isle of Salt. 6 Del Fogo, or the Isle of Fire. 7 St. Nicholas. 8 Maggio, or Majo. 9 St. Jago. Some add to these a tenth, called Brava, Discovered all in the year 1440. by a Genoise called Antonio de Noli, employed therein at the charges and direction of Henry Duke of Vise, one of the younger sons of King John of Portugal, the first of that name. Of the most little to be said. The principal, and indeed the onely ones which are now inhabited, are Majo, Del Fogo, St. Jago. 1 Majo, is of most repute for a Le of two leagues long; the waters whereof are by the heat of the Sun turned into Salt, which is here made in great abundance. 2 Del Fogo, is called from the Flakes of fire which it sends forth usually; and tell so thick upon the ship of Sir Anthony Sherley when he took the Island, An. 1596. that one might have writ his name in the ashes on the upper Deck, with the top of his finger. 3 The principal of all St. Jago, yet but seven miles long; Rocky and Mountainous, but full of very pleasant Valleys, and well inhabited. The chief Town of it called Riblera, or Ribiera la Grande, a Colony of Portugals; situate on a fine River and a beautiful Haven: taken and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, in the year 1585. and after by Sir Anthony Sherley, An. 1596.

The name of Gorgades, as the more ancient of the two, is almost forgotten. Given to those Islands, as supposed (but I cannot see upon what grounds) to be the seat of the Gorgons; the proper habitation, or dwelling place of Medusa, and her two fair sisters. This Medusa said, or rather fabled by the Poets, to have been a Woman of great beauty; Who either for suffering her body to be abused by Neptune, in one of the Temples of Pallas, or for preferring her self before Pallas, had by the said Goddess, her hair turned into Snakes; and this property annexed unto them, that whosoever looked on her, should be turned into Stones: which quality was retained after she was slain, and beheaded by Perseus. Thus and far more fabulously the Poets. The Historians (for as some think, omnis fabula fundatur in historia) relate, how this Medusa was indeed a Lady of such exceeding beauty, that all men that saw her, were amazed: and of such a wife and subtle brain, that for that cause onely men attributed unto her a Serpents head. She abounding in wealth, and by Piracy molesting the Seas of Europe, was invaded by an Army of Gracians, under the leading of Perseus, who in a single combat slew her. Perseus when he plucked off her helmet, admiring that beauty which he had destroyed, cut off her head, and carried it into Greece: where the people beyond measure wondered at the rare composition of her face, and the exceeding beauty of her hair: and are therefore said to have by her head been metamorphosed into stones. Pausanias in his Corinthiacks so reports the story.

12. The CANARIES.

THE CANARIES are in number seven, situate over against the Coast of Lybia Interior; so called from Canaria, one of the principal of the number. By Pliny, Ptolomy, and other of the Ancient Writers they were called Insula Fortunata, the fortunate Islands: and amongst them of greatest note for being made the fixed place of the first Meridian; removed since to S. Michaels one of the Azores. But those Ancients knew but six of them by name, and in the naming of these six do not well agree. By Pliny, whom Solinus followeth, they are said to be, 1 Ombrio, 2 Junonia Major, 3 Junonia Minor, 4 Capraria, 5 Nivaria, and 6 Canaria. By Ptolomy thus reckoned. 1 Aprofita, 2 Hera, The Canaries (or Junonia) 3 Pluitania, 4 Casperia, 5 Canaria, and 6 Pincuria. Where we may note also to our purpose, that though these Authors disagree in all the rest of the names (Junonia being added by the Translators unto Ptolomies Hera) yet they agree in making Canaria to be one: which sheweth that one to be of eminence enough, to give the name of Canary Islands unto all the rest. Called Fortunate, from an opinion which the ancients had of their fruitfulness, and other excellencies; in which respects, several Countreys, in those times had the names of Macaria, Felix, Fortunate. Now better known by the new names of 1 Canary. 2 Palma. 3 Tenariffe. 4 Gomero. 5 Ferro. 6 Lansarote, and 7 Erlerte-Ventura.

1. CANARIA, or Canaria Magna, because the biggest of the Cluster, is said to be 90 miles in compass, and to contain 9000 persons: Plentiful in Barley, Honey, Wax, Sugar-Canes, Goats, Kine, and Camels; of which, and of their Cheese, and the skins of Beasts they raise great profit: but from nothing more than from their Wood (whereof they have very great abundance) used by the Clothier for the well colouring of his Cloth. From hence and from the other of these Islands which bear this name; come the fine singing Birds called Canary birds; and so do also those rich Wines, (the fruit of the Rhenish Grape transplanted) which we call Canaries. A sort of Wine, if not sophisticated and abused, which is said to fume less into the head, please the Palat more, and better help the natural weakness of a cold stomach (if moderately and discreetly used) than any other Wines whatsoever. Brought hence in such abundance to supply our luxury, that no less than 3000 Tuns hereof are vended yearly into England and the Netherlands onely.

2. PALMA, one of the least in circuit, but as rich as any; fruitful in Wine and Sugars, abundantly well stored with Cattel, and great plenty of Cheese; and therefore made the victualling place of the Spanish Fleets, as they pass to Brasil, and Perna. This Island together with Canary, and Tenariffe, make up the Bishoprick of the Canaries. One of the Bishops whereof was that Melchior Canis a Dominican Friar; whose works now extant in defence of the Church of Rome, shew him to have been a moderate and learned man, and Master of a perfect Ciceronian stile. The residue of the Islands are of the Diocese of Madera.

3. TENARIFFE, somewhat less than the Grand Canary, but of the same fertility and condition with it, is most remarkable for a mountain of so great a height, that it may be seen 90 leagues at Sea, in a fair clear day. Some reckon it 15 miles high, others 15 leagues, and some advance it to 60 miles, but with little credit. With truth enough most of our Travellers and Geographers hold it to be the highest in the whole world. The Form, Pyramidal, in shape agreeing to those Prodigies of Art and Wonder, the Egyptian Pyramids. The top whereof ending in a sharp point, called the Pike of Tenariffe, is said to be seldom without snow; and therefore probably conceived to be the Nivaria of Pliny.

4. HIERO, or FERRI Insula, so called from the Iron Mines therein, is by some thought to be the Pluitalia; by others the Aprofita of Ptolomy; and some again more probably, the Ombrio of Pliny, if this and Ptolomies Pluitalia be not one and the same; as for my part I think they be. And it might possibly have those names in the Greek and Latine, because it hath in it no fresh waters but what they do receive in showers, and preserve in Cisterns: it being added by late Writers (which the ancients knew not) that these showers do daily fall upon them from the Leaves of a Tree, which alwayes covered with a Cloud doth distill these waters; preserved in a large Cistern underneath the Tree, for the use of Man and Beast throughout the Island.

5. GOMERA, now as civil and well cultivated as any of the rest, was the most barbarous of all when first discovered: it being here and here only, the ordinary sign and evidence of their Hospitality, to let their friends lie with their wives, and receive theirs in testimony of reciprocal kindness: for which cause here as in some places of the Indies, the sisters Son did use accustomably to inherit.

6. LANSAROTE the first of these Islands which was made subject to the Crown of Castile, discovered by some adventurous Biscains, An. 1393. by whom spoiled and pillaged, and the poor King and Queen thereof, and 170 of their Subjects of better quality, brought away Prisoners into Spain. On this discovery the Kings of Castile challenged a propriety in all these Islands; of which more anon. In this of Lansarote there was an Episcopal See erected by Pope Martin the 5th removed unto the Isle of Canary in the time of Ferdinand the Catholic.

7. ERLERT-VENTURA, of the same nature with the rest, supposed to be the Capraria of Pliny, and the Casperia of Ptolomy; but not else observable. Near unto these, but not within the name and notion of the Fortunate, or Canary Isles, are certain others of less note, that is to say, 1 Gratiosa. 2 St. Clara. 3 Roca. 4 Lobos. 5 Alegance; and 6 Inferno, small and of no account, nor yielding any matter of observation.

The knowledge of these Islands being lost with the Roman Empire, they lay concealed and undiscovered till the year 1330. or thereabouts; when an English, or as some say, a French Ship, distressed by tempest, did in that misfortune fall upon them. Notice whereof being given in the Court of Portugal, in the reign of King Alphons the fourth, Lewis de Ordo was designed for the conquest of them. Who being repulsed at Gomera, Anno 1334. gave the enterprize over, though on this ground the Portugals build their first claim unto these Islands. But the news spreading by degrees to the Court of Rome, Clement the sixth thought fit to make a grant of them to Prince Lewis of Spain, Son of Alphons de la Cerde the right Heir of Castile, by the old name of the Fortunate Islands; and to assist him in the conquest, caused Levies of Soldiers to be made both in France and Italy. Which coming to the ears of the English Ambassadors in the Popes Court, they feared that some transport had been made of the British Islands (than which they thought that none could better deserve the name of the Fortunate Islands) and in all haste dispatched a Post to the Court of England, for the preventing of the danger.

danger. The people at the time of this first discovery, were so rude and ignorant, that they did eat their flesh raw for want of fire ; and killed, or rather turned up the earth with the horns of Oxen, for want of Ploughs, or Tools of Iron ; their beards they shaved with a sharp flint, and committed the care of their Children to the nursing of Goats. To kill a beast was conceived to be the basest Office that could be possibly put upon them, and therefore commonly imposed on Prisoners and condemned person ; who being thus made the common Slaughter-men, were to live separate from the rest. Their Government by Kings, in each Island one ; whom at their deaths, they set up naked in a Cave, propped against the wall with a staff in his hand, and a Vessel of Milk fast by him, the better to enable him for his journey to the other world ; and leaving him in the Grave with these solemn words, Depart in peace, O thou blessed Soul. The like Funeral they bestowed also on the chief of their Nobles. Yet was not the Government in those times so purely Regal, but that they had a Common Council (as it were) out of all the Islands, consisting of 130 persons : who did not onely direct in Civil matters, but in Sacred also, prescribing to the people both their Faith and Worship ; and for their pains were privileged with the first nights lodging with every Bride, which the Husband was to offer to some one of them.

But to return unto the Story, nothing being done by Lewis de la Cerde, in pursuance of the Popes Donation, it hapned in the year 1393. that some Adventurers of Biscay, letting out certain Ships from Sevil to seek their Fortunes at Sea, fell amongst these Islands. And having pillaged Lansarote as before was said, and observed the number, greatness, and situation of all the rest, returned into Spain, with great store of Wax, Hides, and other commodities, with which those Islands did abound : extremely welcom to King Henry, who then reigned in Cassile, and did intend from that time forwards to possess himself of them. By Katharine one of the daughters of John Duke of Lancaster, the Dowager of this King Henry, during the minority of John the 2^d, the Conquest of them was committed to John of Betancourt, an adventurous French-man, (conditioned he should hold them under the Sovereignty of the Crown of Cassile) by whom four of the Islands were subdued, though he himself perished in the action, An. 1417. Young Betancourt the Son, not able to subdue Canary, to which most of the Islanders had retired ; fortified himself as well as he could in the Isle of Lansarote, and took unto himself the title of King : which he left not long after to one Mennais ; in whose time the Islanders under his command received the Gospel, and had a See Episcopal in the Isle of Lansarote. But this new King making money by the sale of his Subjects, (as well of the new Christians, as the old Idolaters) complaint was made of him in the Court of Cassile ; and Pedro Barva de Campos with three Ships of war is sent against him : with whom unable to contend, with the good leave and liking of the King of Cassile, he sold his interest in these Islands to one Fernando Peres a Knight of Sevil, who by the wealth and power of that City made good his purchase, and left it unto his Successors. But we must know, that the posterity of this Peres enjoyed the four lesser Islands onely ; Canaria it self, Tenariffe, and the Isle of Palmer, being under the command of their own Kings. And so continued till the reign of Ferdinand the Catholick, who in the year 1483. under the conduct of Alphonso de Mexica, and Pedro de Vera, two noble Captains, became master of them ; and translated the Episcopal See from Lansarote to the Great Canary. So that although the Portugals claim these Islands in right of the first discovery, yet the possession hath gone alwayes with the Crown of Cassile. Divided at the present into two Estates, (but the one subordinate to the other) Gomera, Lansarote, and Mierra, being in the hands of some private Subjects, those which belong unto the Crown, being Canaria, Palma, Tenariffe, and Fuente-Pentura, are said to yield yearly to the King 50000 Ducats ; the Seat of Justice being fixed in the Isle of Canaria, unto which all the rest resort as they have occasion.

13. MADERA, & 14. HOLY PORT.

13. MADERA, the greatest Island of the Atlantick, is situate in the Latitude of 32. over against the Cape of Cantin in Morocco; in compass 140 miles, some add 20 more. So called of the wilderness of Trees there growing, when first discovered; the Portugals naming that Madera, which the Latins call Materia, and we English Timber: with which the Ile was so overgrown, that the best way to clear it and make it habitable, was by consuming them with fire; which rag'd so horribly for the time, that the people employ'd in it were fain to go far into the Sea to refresh themselves. But the Husbandry was well bestow'd; the Ashes making for good compost to enrich the Soil, (as burning the Turf of barren lands, and ploughing the Ashes of it, on some grounds with us) that at the first it yielded sixty-fold increase. And though the first virtue of that experiment be long since decayed, yet still it yieldeth thirty-fold in most places of it; fruitful withall of a kind of Plant used in dying Clothes, which is hence called Mader; and of Sugar-Canes in such a wonderful manner, that for a time the fifths of the Sugars herein made amounted yearly to 60000 Arrobes; now not half so much. The Ile wonderfully fruitful also of Honey, Wax, rich Fruits, and the choicest Wines; the Slips whereof were brought from Candy, bringing forth here more Grapes than leaves, and Clusters of two, three, and four spans long: The Hills well stored with Goats, the Plains with numerous Herds of Cattel; the Woods with Peacocks, Thrushes, Pigeons: these last to ignorant of the injury which Man might do them, that at the first coming of the Portugals thither, they would suffer themselves to be taken up; but now have wit enough to keep out of danger.

The whole Island in all parts well watered, having besides many pleasant Springs, eight handfom Rivers, wherewith the Earth refresh'd and moistned, yields the sweeter Herbage; which otherwise by reason of the heat of the Air (never very cool) might not be so nourishing. The chief City of it hath the name of Fouchial, the See of an Archbishop, and the Seat of Justice: known to the Romans by the name of Junonis, or Antolala, as many learned men conceive, and again forgotten; it was of later times discovered discovered by one Machan, an English-man, who was cast upon it by a tempest, An. 1344. who burying there his wife, or some other woman which he had in his company, writ on her tomb his name, and coming thither, with the cause thereof; which gave the Portugals occasion to look further after it. Desolate, and unpeopled at the first discovery, now exceeding populous: and of no small advantage to the Crown of Portugal, to which first united, An. 1410. under the conduct of Prince Henry, before mentioned.

14. INSULA PORTUS SANCTI Id. of the Isle of HOLY-PORT; is distant from Madera about 40 miles; neighbouring the Coasts of Mauwritania Tingitana, and therefore probably conceived to be the Cerne of Pholomy. So called, because discovered by some Portugal-Mariners (by the direction and encouragement of the said P. Henry) on All-hallows day, An. 1428. Desolate and uninhabited at the first discovery, but now very well peopled. In compass about 15 miles; well stored with Corn and Fruits, great shoals of Fish upon their shores, plenty enough of Bees and Goats: but such abundance of Conies (bred of one Doe Coney brought thither when great with young) that the Inhabitants were no less pestered with them in these later times, than the Baleares were of old; insomuch that they were out of hope to withstand the mischief, or repair the damages sustained by them. A little Island not far off, breedeth nothing else. The chief Town of it Porto-Santo, or Holy-Port, seated on a convenient Rode, but a sorry Haven, was taken by Sir Amias Preston, in our wars with Spain, An. 1596. but being sacked and spoiled; was again abandoned. In former times called Cerne, as before was said, and reckoned for the most remote Colony which the Carthaginians, or Phœnicians had in the Western Ocean; beyond which they conceived the Sea to be unnavigable, (proved otherwise by Hanno's voyage) choaked with mud and weeds. Called therefore Cerne ultima (Ethiopum populus alit ultima Cerne) by Pestus Rufus, and others of the Ancient writers.

15. THE HESPERIDES.

15. THE HESPERIDES, by Pliny and Pomponius Mela, are said to be two in number, situated in the Atlantic Seas, but we find not where. Much memorized and chanted by the Ancient Poets, for giving a safe and pleasant habitation to the daughters of Atlas (which they call by the name of Hesperides also); the curious Gardens by them planted, and the Golden Apples of it which were kept by a Dragon, and took hence by Hercules. But the Historians remove these Gardens out of the Sea, into the main Land of Africk, and fix them in Cyrene, where already spoken of. Which notwithstanding, it is granted that there were anciently some Islands in the Atlantic Ocean, noted by this name, and said to be exceeding fruitful of their own accord: and therefore probably the same which Plutarch in the life of Sertorius calleth Insule Atlanticæ, and describeth them thus: “Αὐτὰς δύο νῆσους, ἀπὸ τοῦ μεγάλου ἡπείρου χωριστάς, &c. They are (saith he) two Islands parted by a narrow Strait of the Sea, distant from the main Land of Africk 10000 furlongs, which in our account cometh to 1250 miles) called also the Isles of Blessed Souls, and the Fortunate Islands. They have rain there very seldom, but a fine sweet Dew, which makes the Earth exceeding fruitful both for tillage and planting fruits, which sometimes grow without any care or labour of the husband-man; sufficient by their plenty and sweetness to maintain the people, much given to ease, and hardly troubling themselves with any business. The Air for the most part very temperate, never extrem in any changes of the season; the rigor of the Northern, and Eastern winds, being by so long a passage thither very much abated; as on the other side the Western and South-Eastern winds do much refresh it with such Mists as they bring from the Sea, to the great comfort of the people. A place so generally sweet, that the barbarous people in it have a constant and approved opinion, that these should be the Elysian Fields, the seats of the blessed souls departed, described by Homer: with the report whereof Sertorius was so highly taken, that he intended to have given over the pursuit of the Civil wars, and there to spend the rest of his days in peace and happiness; which he had done, if the Cilician men accustomed unto spoil and rapine, had not took him off. So far and to this purpose Plutarch. But what these Islands are, and where now to be found, (for in regard of their great distance from the Coast of Africk, they cannot be the Fortunate Islands spoken of before) I cannot easily determine: unless we should conjecture, as Ortelius doth, that they are the Islands of Cuba and Hispiniola, or the Coasts of America; to the Story and Chorography whereof we are now to hasten.

And so much for the Iles of AFRICK.

COSMOGRAPHIE, The Fourth Book.

PART II.

CONTAINING THE CHOROGRAPHY and HISTORY OF AMERICA, AND ALL THE Principal Kingdoms, Provinces, Seas, and Isles of it.

OF AMERICA.

AMERICA, the fourth and last part of the World, is bounded on the East with the Atlantick Ocean, and the Pergivian Seas, by which parted from Europe, and Africa; which Seas, the Mariners call Mare del Nort; on the West, with the Pacific Ocean, by the Mariners called Mare del Zur, which divides it from Asia; on the South, with some part of Terra Australis Incognita, from which separated by a long, but narrow Streit, called the Streits of Magellan; the North bounds of it hitherto not so well discovered, as that we can certainly affirm it to be Island, or Continent.

It is called by some, and that most aptly, THE NEW WORLD: New, for the late Discovery; and World, for the vast greatness of it. The most usual, and yet somewhat the more improper name, is that of America; because Americus Vesputius an Adventurous Florentine, discovered a great part of the Continent of it. But since the first light he had to find out those parts, came from the directions and example of Columbus, who first led the way; and that Sebastian Cabot touched at many places, which Americus Vesputius never saw, it might as properly have been called Columbana, Sebastiana, or Cabotia. The most improper name of all, and yet not much less used than that of America, is, the West-Indies: West, in regard of the Western situation of it, from these parts of Europe; and Indies, either as mistook for some part of India, at the first Discovery, or else because the Sea-men used to call all Countries, if remote and rich, by the name of India.

Many are of opinion, but rather grounded on conjectural presumptions, than Demonstrative Arguments, that America was known long before our late Discoveries. Their Reasons drawn. 1 From the Doctrine of the Antipodes, which being maintained by many of the ancient Writers, inferreth (as they think) a knowledge of these parts of the world, which are opposite to us. But unto this it may be answered, that the knowledge of the Antipodes amongst the Ancients was by supposition, at the best by Demonstration only, and not in fact; or thus, that it was known that there were Antipodes, but the Antipodes were not known. 2ly It is said that Hanno, a Noble Carthaginian, discovered a great Island in the Western Ocean, and after a long voyage returned home again, not wanting Sea-room, but Victuals, as he told the Senate. But he that writ the actions of Hanno in this famous voyage, (which some conceive to be Hanno himself) informs us that he sailed not Westwards, but more towards the South: and therefore this great Island, whatsoever it was, (whether Medera, or some one of the Fortunate Islands, I determine not) could not be America. 3ly It is alledged that Plato in his Timæus speaks of a great Island of the Atlantick Ocean, Lybiam & Africam adæquans (as out of him Tertullian hath it) as big as Lybia, and Africk properly so called: which he confesseth to be drowned long before his time, and therefore possibly never extant but in some mens fancies. 4ly. That Aristotle in the book de Mundo (if that book be his) speaks of an Island very fruitful, and full of navigable Rivers; discovered by the Carthaginians, and by them forbidden to be planted upon pain of death. Which Island being affirmed by that Author, to be Mulorum iterum itinere a Gadibus remota, hath made some men conceive it to be this America, or some of the great Islands of it. As if it might not be as well one of the Azores, or perhaps Madera; or some other of the Islands in the Road of Hannor voyage. Certain I am, that One of the best friends the Phœnicians have, who would not gladly lose such an opportunity of enabling their performances in Navigation (could any thing be built upon it) doth wave the whole Relation as of doubtful credit; and knoweth of no such place as is there described by that Author, whofoever he were. 5ly. Some have produced these Verses of Seneca, to inferre a knowledge of this Country amongst the Ancients, viz.

*Venient annis secula seris,
Quibus Oceanus vincula rerum
Laxet, & ingens pateat tellus,
Novosque Typhis delegat Orbes,
Nec sit Terris ultima Thule.*

Which may be Englished in these words:

In the last dayes an age shall come,
Wherein the all-devouring Fome Shall lose its former bounds, and shew
Another Continent to view.
New-worlds, which Night doth now conceal,
A second Typhis shall reveal;
And frozen Thule shall no more
Be of the Earth the furthest Shore.

But this Argument can bring no necessary, nor so much as a probable inference, of any such Continent as this, then known to Seneca: the Poet in that Chorus shewing as well the continual dangers, as the possible effects of Navigation; that there might be, not that there were more Lands discovered, than those formerly known. 6ly. Some hold this Country to be the Land of Ophir, to which Solomon is said in the holy Scriptures to have sent for Gold. But Ezion-Geber, which is there also said to be the station where his Navy lay, was situate in the bottom of the Red-Sea, or Bay of Arabia: whereas if he had sent this way, his shipping must have lain at Joppa, or some other port of the Mediterranean, and from thence set forwards through the Straits of Gibraltar, and so plainly Westward. 7ly. Finally, in the History of Wales writ by David Powel, it is reported that Madoc the son of Owen Gwynedd Prince of Wales, of purpose to decline engaging in a civil war raised in that Estate, in the year 1170. put himself to Sea; and after a long course of Navigation, came into this Country: where after he had left his men, and fortified some places of advantage in it, he returned home for more supplies; which he carried with him in ten Barks; but neither he nor they looked after by the rest of that Nation. To which some add, that here is still some smattering of the Welsh, or British tongue to be found amongst them; as that a Bird with a white head is called Penguin, and the like: in which regard some sorry Statesmen went about to entitle Queen Elizabeth unto the Sovereignty of these Countries; Others more wise, dissuaded from that vain Ambition, considering that Welsh-men, as well as others, might be cast upon those parts by force of Tempest; and easily implant some few words of their own among the people there inhabiting. And though I needs must say for the honour of Wales, that they have more grounds for what they say, than those which look for this new World in the Atlantis of Plato, the Atlantick Islands of Aristotle and Plutarch, or the Discoveries of Hanno the Carthaginian: yet am I not so far convinced of the truth thereof, the use of the Mariners Compass being not so ancient (without which such a voyage could not be performed;) but that I may conclude with more satisfaction, that this Country was unknown to the former ages.

But now, as Mela the Geographer said once of Britain, then newly conquered by the Romans; Britannia qualis sit, qualesque progenet, mox certiora & magis explorata dicentur; quippe jura diu clausam aperit ecce Principum maximus (he means Claudius Caesar) nec indomitum modo sed & incognitum ante se Gentium Victor: So may we say of America, on these late discoveries. What kind of Country it is, and what men it produceth, we do; and shall know more certainly then in former times; since those puissant Kings of Spain have laid open almost all the parts thereof, inhabited not only by unvanquished, but even unknown Nations. For God remembering the promise of his Son, that his Gospel before the end of the World should be preached to all Nations; stirred up one Christopher Colon, or Columbus, born at Avoy, in the Signeury of Genoa, to be the instrument for finding out those parts of the World, to which the sound of the Gospel had not yet arrived. Who being a man of great abilities, and born to undertake great matters, could not persuade himself (the motion of the Sun considered;) but that there was another World to which that glorious Planet did impart both his light and heat, when he went from us. This World he purposed to seek after, and opening his Design to the State of Genoa, An. 1486. was by them rejected. On this repulse, he sent his brother Bartholomew to King Henry the seventh of England; who in his way hapned unfortunately into the hands of Pirates, by whom detained a long while.

but at last enlarged. As soon as he was set at liberty, he repaired to the Court of England; where his Proposition found such a cheerful entertainment at the hands of the King, that Christopher Columbus was sent for to come thither also. But God had otherwise disposed of his rich purchase. For Christopher, not knowing of his brothers imprisonment, nor hearing any tidings from him, conceived the offer of his service to have been neglected; and thereupon made his desires known at the Court of Castile: where after many delays, and six years attendance on the business, he was at last furnished with three ships only, and those not for Conquest, but Discovery. With this small strength he sailed on the main Ocean more than 60 days, yet could see no Land, so that the discontented Spaniards began to mutiny; and partly out of scorn to be under the command of a Stranger, partly desirous to return, would not go a foot forwards. Just at that time it hapned, that Columbus did discern the Clouds to carry a clearer colour, than they did before: and probably conceiving that this clearness proceeded from some high habitable place, restrained the time of their expectation within the compass of three days, passing his word to return again, if they did not see the Land within that time. Toward the end of the third day, one of the Company called Rodrigo de Triane (he deserves to have his name recorded, being no otherwise rewarded for such joyful news) descried fire; an evident Argument that they drew near unto some shore. The place discovered was an Island on the Coast of Florida, by the Natives called Guahani; by Columbus St. Saviours; now counted one of the Lucas. Landing his men, and causing a Tree to be cut down, he made a Cross thereof, which he erected near the place, where he came on Land; and by that Ceremony took possession of this NEW WORLD, for the Kings of Spain, Octob. 11. An. 1492. Afterwards he discovered, and took possession of Hispaniola; and with much treasure, and content, returned towards Spain: Preferred for this good service by the Kings themselves, first to be Admiral of the Indies, and afterwards to a Coat of Arms, with this Inscription, for Castile and Leon, Columbus hath gotten a NEW WORLD; and in conclusion unto the title of Duke De la Vega, in the Isle of Jamaica. News of this fortunate Discovery being sent to Pope Alexander the 6. by the Kings of Castile, he very liberally bestowed upon them all those Countries, which they already had, or should afterwards discover in the Western world; advising them to use their diligence and endeavours for converting those people to the Faith; which was done accordingly. For the next year Columbus being furnished with 18 Ships for more Discoveries, and his Brother Bartholomew made Governour of the Countries discovered by him, they took along with them one Buyl, a Benedictine Monk, as the Popes Vicar General, accompanied with the learned Clarks, which were to be assistants to him in the converting of that people to the Christian Faith. In this second voyage he discovered the Islands of Cuba and Jamaica, and built the Town of Isabella (afterwards better known by the name of Domingo) in Hispaniola; from whence for some severities used against the mutinous Spaniards, he was sent Prisoner into Castile, but very honourably entertained, and absolved from all the Crimes imputed to him. In the year 1497. he began his third voyage, in which he discovered the Countries of Paria, and Cumana, on the firm Land, with the Islands of Cubagna, and Margarita, with many other Islands, Capes, and Provinces, which shall be touched upon particularly in their several places. In the year 1500. he began his fourth and last voyage, in the course whereof, coming to Hispaniola he was unworthily denied entrance into the City of Domingo, by Nicholas de Ovendo, the then Governour of it; after which scouring along the Sea-Coasts, as far as Nombré de Dios, but adding little to the fortune of his former discoveries, he returned back to Cuba, and Jamaica, and from thence to Spain, where about six years after (that is to say, An. 1506.) he departed this life, and was honourably interred at Sevil, where to this day remaineth this Epitaph on his Tombe, bald in it self, and otherwise exceeding short of so great a merit. Of which I must tell you by the way, that the Philip, whom the Versifier (I do not say the Poet) called Philippus Hispanus, should rather have been called Philippus Austriacus, or Philippus Burgundus, as being meant of that Philip of Austria, Duke of Burgundy, who had then married Joan, Sole Daughter and Heir of the Kings of Spain, and after the death of Isabella succeeded in the Realm of Castile, or else the Epitaph must be written long after his death, and meant of Philip the 2. Son of Charles the fifth, who was not born until the year 1527. and came not to the Crown above 20 years after. Now for this Epitaph, such as it is, it is this that followeth:

*Christophorus genuit quem Genoa Clara Columbus,
(Numine percussus quo nescio) primus in Altum
Descendens Pelagus, solem versusque cadentem
Directo cursu, nostro haec addita Mundo Litora detexit, Hispano paritura Philippo:
Audenda hinc aliis plura, & majora relinquent.*

Which may be Englished in these words:

I Christopher Columbus, whom the Land
Of Genoa first brought forth, first took in hand
I know not by what Deity incited,
To scour the Western Seas, and was delighted
To seek for Countries never known before.
Crown'd with success, I first descried the shore
Of the New World, then destined to sustain
The future yoke of Philip Lord of Spain.
And yet I greater matters left behind
For men of more means and a braver mind.

And yet I greater matters left behinde
For men of more means and a braver minde:

Dying

Dying he left two Sons behind him, of which the youngest called Ferdinand died unmarried, the eldest called Diego, succeeded his Father in the Admiralty of the Indies, and the Dukedom of Vega, and married Marie of Toledo, Daughter of Ferdinand Duke of Alva; but having (as it seemeth) no issue by her, he spent the greatest part of his Estate in founding the Library at Sevil, spoken of before, which he furnished with 12000 Volumes, and endowed with a liberal revenue to maintain the same. But though his Family be extinct, yet his Fame shall live, renowned to all posterities, as the first discoverer of this new world, and consequently the greatest and most Fortunate advancer of the Spanish Monarchy, though in his life time so maligned by most part of the Spaniards, that Bobadilla being sent into those parts for redress of grievances, loaded him with Irons, and returned him prisoner into Spain. Nor did they only stick after his death, to deprive him of the honour of this Discovery (attributing it to I know not what Spaniard, whose Cards and Descriptions he had seen) but in his life would often say, that it was a matter of no such difficulty to have found these Countries; and that if he had not done it when he did, some body else might have done it for him. Whose peevishness he confuted by this modest artifice, desiring some of them, who insolently enough had contended with him touching this Discovery, to make an Egg stand firmly upon one of its ends. Which when they could not do upon many Trials, he gently bruizing one end of it, made it stand upright; letting them see without any further reprehension, how easie it was to do that thing which we see another do before us.

But to proceed, Columbus having thus led the way, was seconded by John Cabot a Venetian, the Father of Sebastian Cabot, in behalf of Henry the seventh of England; who in the year 1497. discovered all the North-East Coasts hereof, from the Cape of Florida in the South to Newfound-Land, and Terradi Labrador in the North, causing the Roycelets to turn Homagers to that King and the Crown of England. Next after him succeeded Americus Vespasius, an adventurous Florentine, employed therein by Emanuel King of Portugal, An. 1501. on a design of finding out a nearer way to the Moluccas, than by the Cape of good Hope, who though he passed not further than the Cape of St. Augustines in Brazil, without so much as having a sight of the great River de la Plata, which washeth the South-parts of that Country; yet from him (to the great injury and neglect of the first Discoverers) the Continent, or main Land of this Country, hath the name of America; by which still known, and most commonly called. Followed herein by divers private Adventurers and undertakers, out of all parts of Europe, bordering on the Ocean. Ferdinand Magellanus was the first that compassed the whole world, and found the South passage, called Eretum Magellanicum to this day: followed herein by Drake, Cavendish, of England, Frobisher, and Davies attempted a Discovery of the North-west passage; Willoughby and Burroughs of the North-east. So that according to that elegant saying of the learned Verulam, in his Advancement of learning; this great building the world, had never thorough-light made in it, till these our days: by which as almost all parts of Learning, so in especial this of Navigation, and by consequence of Cosmography also, hath obtained an incredible proficiency in these later times.

For in the Infancy and first Ages of the world, (pardon me I beseech you this short, but not unprofitable digression) men lived at home, neither intent upon any Foreign Merchandize, nor inquisitive after the lives and Fortunes of their Neighbours: or in the language of the Poet,

Nondum cesa suis peregrinum ut viseret Orbem, Montibus, in liquidis Pinus descenderat undas.

The Pine left not the Hills on which it stood,
To seek strange Lands, or rove upon the Flood.

But when the Providence of God had instructed Noah how to build the Ark, for the preservation of himself and his children from the general Deluge: the posterity, which descended from him, had thereby a pattern for the making of Ships and other Vessels (perfected in a more length of time) whereby to make the waters passable, and maintain a necessary intercourse betwixt Nation and Nation. 'Tis true, the Heathen Writers which knew not Noah, attribute the invention of shipping to sundry men, according to such Informations or Traditions, as they had received: Strabo to Minos King of Crete; Diodorus Siculus, to Neptune, who was therefore called the God of the Seas; and Tibullus, to the people of Tyre, a Town indeed of great wealth and traffick, and the most famous Empory of the elder times; saying

Prima ratem ventis credere dicta Tyrens.

The Tyrians first the Art did find
To make Ships travel with the winde.

And questionless the Tyrians, and the rest of the Phanicians, enjoying a large Sea-coast, and many safe and capacious Havens, being in these times most strong at Sea, and making for many fortunate Navigations into most parts of the then known World; might give the Poet some good colour for his affirmation. From the Phanicians, the Egyptians (their next neighbours) might derive the Art of Navigation, though being an ingenious people, they did add much to it. For whereas the first Vessels were either made of the body of some great Tree, made hollow by the Art of man; or else of divers rods or twigs fashioned into a Boat, and covered with the skins of Beasts (which we have spoken of before, when we were in Sangnebar, and which are still in use amongst these Americans:) the Phanicians brought them them first into strength and form; but the Egyptians added Decks unto them. By Danaus King of Egypt when he fled from his brother Ramefis, the use of shipping was first brought amongst the Greeks: who before that time knew no other way of crossing their narrow Seas, but on Beams or Rafters tied to one another. Nave primus ab Egypto Danaus adventit; ante enim Ratibus navigabatur, as it is in Pliny: where we may see the true and genuine difference betwixt Rattis, and Navis; though now both used indifferently for all sorts of shipping. Amongst the Greeks, those of Crete were the ablest Sea-men; which gave occasion to Aristotle to call Crete the Lady of the Sea: and to Strabo to make Minos the Inventor of Ships. In following times, the Carthaginians, being a Colony of Tyre, were most considerable in this kinde; and by the benefit of their shipping much distressed the Romans. But so it happened (as all things do and must concur to Gods publick purposes in the alteration of Estates) that a Tempest separating a Quinqueremis or Gally of five banks of Oars, from the rest of the Carthaginian Fleet, cast it on the shore of Italy: by which accident the Romans learning the Art of Ship-wrights, soon became Masters of the Sea. That France, and Spain were taught the use of shipping by the Greeks, and Phanicians, is a thing past questioning: Marseilles in the one being a Phoecean, and Gades in the other a Tyrian Colony. As for the Belgians, and the Britains, it is probable that they first learnt it of the Romans (though formerly they had some way to transport themselves from one shore to the other:) For Cæsar telleth us of the Belgae, Ad eos Mercatores minimè comment, that they were not at all visited by Foreign Merchants. And the same Cæsar found the Seas betwixt France, and Britain, so ill furnished with Vessels, that he was fain to make ships to transport his Army: Singulari Militum studio circiter sexcentis & duodetriginta Naves invenit, as his own words are.

Having thus brought Navigation to the greatest height which it had in those days; let us look back again on the Inventors of particular Vessels, and the Tackle unto them belonging. That the Phanicians first invented open Vessels, and the Egyptians Ships with Decks, hath been said before: and unto them also is referred the Invention of Gallies, with two Banks of Oars upon a side; which kind of Vessels grew so large in the course of time, that Ptolomy Philapater is said to have made a Gally of 50 banks. Great Ships of burden, called Circææ, we owe to the Cypriots; Cock-boats, or Skiffs (Scaphæ) to the Illyrians, or Liburnians: Brigantines, (Celoces) to the Rhodians: and Frigots or light Bar ks, (Lembos) unto the Cyrenians. The Phæliæ, and Pamphyli (which we may render Men of War) were the invention of the Pamphylians, and the Inhabitants of Phæliis, a Town of Lycia, in Asia Minor. As for Tackle, the Boeotians invented the Oar; Dadalam, and his son Icarus, the Masts and Sails: Which gave occasion to the Poets to feign, that flying out of Crete, they made wings to their bodies; and that Icarus soaring too high, melted the Wax which fastened his wings unto his shoulders, and thereby perished; the truth being, that presuming too much on this new invention, he ran himself upon a Rock, and was cast away. For Hippagines, vessels for transporting of Horse, we are indebted to the Salaminians; for grappling hooks, to Anarcharsis; for Anchors, to the Tuscan; and for the Rudder, Helm, or Art of Steering, to Typhis the chief Pilot in the famous Argo: who noting that a Kite, when she flew, guided her whole body by her Tail; effected that in the devices of Art, which he had observed in the works of Nature. By these helps some great Voyages were performed in the elder times; the greatest those of Jafon, Ulysses, and Alexander, with the Fleets of Solomon, and the Egyptian Kings. Of these, Jafon and his companions, sayled in the ship called Argo, through the Euxine Sea, and part of the Mediterranean; Ulysses, through the Mediterranean only; small gullets, if compared with the Ocean. Alexander's journey so famous, and accounted then so hazardous, was but sayling down the River Indus, and four hundred furlongs into the Ocean. And for the Fleets of Solomon, and the Kings of Egypt, it is very apparent, that they went with great leisure, and crawled close by the shore-side: otherwise it had been impossible to have consumed three whole years in going from Ezion-Geber into India, and returning again; which was the usual time of these voyages, as appeareth in 1 King. 10. 22. After the fall of the Roman Monarchy, the most potent States by Sea in the Mediterranean, were the Genoese, and Venetians; in the Ocean the English, and the Hanse-towns; neither of which ever attempted any great discoveries.

But in the year 1300. one Flavio of Malphi in the Realm of Naples, found out the Compass, or Pixis Nautica, consisting of 8 winds only, the four principal, and four collateral: And not long after, the people of Bruges, and Antwerp, perfected that excellent invention; adding 24 other subordinate winds or points. By means of this excellent Instrument, and withal by the good success of Columbus, the Portugals, Eastwards; the Spaniards, Westward; and the English, Northwards; have made many glorious and fortunate Expeditions: which had been utterly impossible to have been performed, and had been foolishly undertaken, when that help was wanting. I know there hath been much pains taken by some learned men, to prove the use of the Mariners Compass to be far more ancient, than is now commonly pretended. Fuller, a very learned and industrious man, but better skilled in the Hebrew tongue, than the Philologie of the Greeks, and Latines, will have it known to Solomon, and by him taught unto the Tyrians and Phanicians (the most famous Sea-men of old times): but he brings no Argument of weight to make good the cause. Nor is it possible that such an excellent invention, so beneficial to the common good of all mankind, should have been forgotten and discontinued, for the space of more than 2000 years, if ever the Tyrians, and Phanicians had been Masters of it: who could not possibly conceal it (had they been so minded) from the Common Mariners, or they not have communicated it for gain, or desire of glory, to the Greeks, and Romans, under whom successively they lived. As little moment do I find in some other Arguments, as that the Lapis Heraclius of the ancient Writers, or the Perforia of Plautus, should be by them intended of the Mariners Compass. For plainly the Perforia of Plautus, is no other than that piece of tackle, which our Mariners now call the Bolin; by which which they use to turn their Sails, and fit them to the change of every wind. And so much doth appear by the Poet himself, in the Comedie which he calls Mercator; saying, Hinc ventus nunc secundus est, cape modo Versoriam. So called from Verso, to turn often, or from Versum the first Supine of Verbo: whence Velum versare is a common phrase amongst the Latines, used for the shifting of the Sail as the winde doth vary. As for the Load-stone, it is called indeed Heracleus Lapis, Ἡρακλῆος λίθος by the Greeks: not because Hercules Tyrinus, whom the Phanicians invoked when they were at Sea, had first found out the vertue of it, as our Fuller thinketh; but because first found neer Heraclea, a City of Lydia, Ἡράκλειος πόλις ἢ Ἡρακλῆος τὸ ἐν Λυδία πόλις, saith Hesychius the old Grammarians. Called for the same reason Magnes, by the writers both Greek, and Latine; because first found in the Territory of Magnesia, a City of Lydia also, whereof Heraclea was a part. So Suidas telleth us of the Greeks, Ἡράκλειος λίθος πρὸς τὴν Μαγνησίαν ἀπιδύσκει, διὰ τὸ Ἡρακλῆος τὴν Μαγνησίαν εἶναι: Heracleum Lapidem quidam Magnesium reddiderunt; quia Heraclea pars est Magnesiæ. Called for the very same reason Lydim Lapis also, but by them known only as a touch-stone. Thus old Lucretius for the Latines.

Quam Magneta vocant patrio de nomine Graii, Magnetum quia sit patriis de finibus ortus.

Which Stone the Greeks do Magnes name,
Because it from Magnesia came.

But I have rambled further than I did intend, drawn by the vertue of the Load-stone too much out of my way. It is time now to return again into America; where the Spaniards at their first Arrival found the people without all manner of Apparel, nought skilled in Agriculture, making their bread either of a Plant called Maize, or a kind of Root called Juca: a Root wherein is a venomous liquor, not inferior to the most deadly poysons; but having first squeezed out this juice, and after dried and prepared the Root, they made their Bread of it. They worshipped Devilish Spirits, whom they called Zemes; in remembrance of whom they kept certain Images made of Cotton wool, like our Childrens Babies: to which they did great reverence, as supposing the Spirit of the Zemes to be in them; and to blind them the more, the Devil would cause these Puppets to seem to move, and to make a noise. They stood also in so great fear of them, that they durst not displeasure them: for if their wills were not fulfilled, the Devil trait excuted vengeance upon some of their Children; so holding this infatuated people in perpetual thraldom. So ignorant they were of all things which they had not seen, that they thought the Christians to be immortal: wondering exceedingly at the Sails, Masts, and Tacklings of their Ships; themselves knowing no Ships or other Vessels, but huge Troughs made of some great-bodied Tree. But this opinion of the Christians immortality (in the sense they meant it) did not long continue: for having taken some of them, they held their heads under the water, till they had quite choked them; by which they knew them to be mortal like other men. Quite destitute of all good learning, they reckoned their time by a confused observation of the course of the Moon; and strangely admired to see the Spaniards know the health and affairs of one another, only by reading of a Letter. Of a plain and honest nature, for the most part they were found to be; Loving and kind in their entertainments, and apt to do good Offices both private and publick, according to their understandings: encouraged thereunto by an opinion which they had, that beyond some certain Hills (but they knew not where) those which lived honestly and justly, or offered up their lives in defence of their Country, should find a place of everlasting peace and happiness. So natural is the knowledge of the Souls immortality, and of some liberty for the future reception of it, that we finde some tract, or other of it in most barbarous Nations. And as for Gold and Silver, which the new-come Christians so adored, they esteemed them no otherwise than as dross: though many times they adorned themselves therewith for the colours sake; as they did also with shels, feathers, and the like fine Gew-gaws.

Of complexion, most of these Americans were reasonably fair and clear, little inclining unto blackness: notwithstanding that a great part of this Country lieth under the same parallel with Ethiopia, Lybia, and the Land of Negrees. So that the extraordinary heat of the Sun is not (as some imagine) the cause of that blackness; though accidentally it may turn the skin into such a colour as we see in many Country-Lasses, even in colder Climates, whose faces are continually exposed to the Sun and Weather. Others more wise in their own conceits (but in no bodies else) will have the natural Seed of the Africans to be black of colour; contrary both to sense and reason, Experience and true natural Philosophy being both against it. And some will have this Blackness laid as a curse on Chama, (from whose posterity the African Nations do derive themselves) because, forsooth, he had carnal knowledge of his wife when they were in the Ark: a fancy as ridiculous, as the other false. So that we must refer it wholly to Gods secret pleasure; though possibly enough the curse of God on Chama and on his posterity (though for some cause unknown to us) hath an influence on it.

Touching the Original of this people, it is most probable that they descended from the Tartars; for which there are some Arguments of especial weight. For first, it may be proved in the way of Negation, that they came not from Europe; as having no remainders of the Arts, Learning, and Civilities of it. And secondly, that they came not from Africa, in regard they have no black-men amongst them, except some few which dwell on the Sea-coasts over against Guinea in the Land of the Negrees, from whence they are supposed to have been brought hither by some Tempest, or other. Thirdly, that they have not the least token, or shew of the arts and industry of China, India, or any civil Region on that side of Asia. The affirmative Arguments prove first, that they came from Asia; next in particular from Tartary. That they they came out of of Asia, is more than manifest, in that the West-side of the Country towards Asia, is far more populous, than the East towards Europe: of which there can be no other reason assigned; than that these parts were first inhabited, and that from hence the rest was peopled. Next, the Idolatry of this people, and the particularities thereof, their incivility, and barbarous qualities, tell us that they are most like the Tartars of any. Thirdly, the West-side of America, if it be not Continent with Tartary, is yet disjoyned by a very small Strait, as may be perceived in all our Maps and Cards, as also in the Description of these Countries: so that there is into these Countries a very quick and easie passage. And fourthly, the people of Quivira, which of all the Provinces of America is the nearest unto Tartary, are said to follow in their whole course of their life, the seasons and best pasturing of their Cattel, just like the Scythian Nomades, or Tartarian Hordes: an evident argument of their Original descent.

But from what Root forever they did first descend, certain it is that they had settled here many ages since, and overspread all the parts and quarters of this spacious Continent; there being no place, which the Spaniards, or any other Adventurers, found desolate, or waste, and without Inhabitants. But their numbers much diminished since these late Discoveries; the Spaniards behaving themselves most inhumanely towards this unarmed and naked people: killing them up like sheep appointed to the slaughter, or otherwise consuming them in their Mines and works of drudgery. And had not Charles the fifth ordained with most Christian prudence, that the Natives should not be compelled to work in the Mines against their wills; but that the Spaniards should provide themselves of Slaves elsewhere: the Natives, in a little longer time had been quite exterminated, to the great reproach of Christianity and the Gospel. For so exceeding barbarous and bloody were they at their first coming thither, that Haithney, a Nobleman amongst them, being persuaded to embrace the Christian faith, demanded first what he should get by being of that Religion: and was answered, that he should get Heaven and the joys thereof: Then would he know, what place was destinatoe such as died unbaptized; and was answered, that they went to Hell, and the torments of it. Finally, asking unto which of these two places the Spaniards went, and being told they went to Heaven; he renounced his baptism: protesting that he would rather go to Hell with the unbaptized, than to live in Heaven with so cruel a people. The rest were driven unto the Fons, like so many Horses to the watering place; and received into the Church of Christ without any instruction: insomuch that one old Frier (as himself confessed to Charles the fifth) had Chritened 700000 of them, and another of that rank 300000. never acquainting them with any of the Articles of the Christian faith, or points of Religious conversation, (except it were to be obedient to their Pastors and Teachers.) Yet here I must confess, (for I am loth to defraud any man of his due) there hath been made a great improvement of Christianity: the number of Christians in this Country, being thought by some Learned man of the Church of Rome, to equal all those of the Latine Churches in Europe. And though perhaps constrained at first unto it as a new Religion, and of a stricter Rule than that which before they had; yet by long time and education it is now grown more plausible and familiar to them. The Church hereof governed by the four Archbishops of 1 Mexico, 2 Lima, 3. S. Foy, and 4 Dominico; who have under them 25 Suffragan Bishops, all liberally endowed and provided for.

When this new world came first acquainted with the old, Isabel Queen of Castile, would not permit any of her husband Ferdinando's subjects, to be planted here, viz. Arragonians, or Valentians, but licensed the Castilians, Andalusians, Biscains, and the rest of her own people only, envying the wealth hereof to the rest. When she was dead, Ferdinando licensed generally all the Spaniards, excluding only the Portugals. But so rich a prize could not so warily be fenced, but that the Portugals, French, English, and now of late the Low-country-men have laid in their own Barns part of the Spaniards harvest; who well hoped to have had a Monopoly of so wealthy a Region, and to have enjoyed without any rival or competitor the possession (I cannot say the love) of a Country so abundantly fruitful. For though some of the Kings of Spain, have been used to say, that they loved the East-Indies as their Mistress; only, in whose favour they could patiently endure a Rival; but esteemed America as their wife; in whose love they could not brook a Competitor, without foul dishonour: yet by his leave (or without it rather) some of his neighbours have made bold with his wife, in these later times; though in the affections of his Mistress they have greater interest. But these attempts of the English and Hollanders, have been an occasion of great strength to the whole Country. For whereas in our first Wars with Spain, in Queen Elizabeth's time, our private Adventurers found the Sea-coasts almost naked of defence, and thereupon made many a rich and prosperous voyage to these parts: the Spaniards upon sight of that weakness and disadvantage, so strongly fortified their Havens and Sea-Towns, that towards the later end of the reign of that Queen, we were not able to accomplish that with great and publick Forces, which before had been performed by small and private. Which caused our Captains and Adventurers, failing oftentimes in the Continent, to make up their Market on the Seas, in the return of the Spanish Navies, as they yet do.

This New World is very plentiful of Spices, Fruits, and such Creatures which the old World never knew; stocked with such store of Kine and Bulls; (brought hither out of Europe since the first discovery) that the Spaniards kill thousands of them yearly, for their tallow and hides only. Blest with such abundance of Gold, that they found in many of their Mines, more Gold than Earth: a Metal which the Americans not regarding, greedily exchanged for Hammers, Knives, Axes, and the like tools of Iron; for before they were wont to make their Canoes, or Boats plain without, and hollow within, by the force of fire. Other particularities shall be specified in the particular Descriptions of the several Countries. I shall now only take a brief view of such of their Beasts and Fowls, as either this old World did not know, or knew not in such shapes and qualities, as are there presented. Their Lynx less in great-ness nels than those in Africa, are said to be of colour gray, and so nimble as to climb Trees; their Dogs snowed like Foxes, but deprived of that property which the Logicians call Proprium quarto modo, for they could not bark; their Hogs with talons sharp as Razors, and the navil of their bodies on the Ridge of their backs: their Stags, and Deer, without Horns; their Sheep (they call them Lamas) not only profitable as with us, for food and raiment, but accustomed to the carrying of burdens, some of 150 pound weight. Amongst such strange Beasts as this old World knew not, we may reckon that deformed one (whose name I finde not) whose forepart resembleth a Fox, the hinder part an App, except the Feet only which are like a Mans; beneath her belly a receptacle like a Purse, where she keeps her young, till they be able to shift for themselves; never coming thence but when they suck, and then in again. The Armadilla is in form like a barbed Horse, seeming to be armed all over, and that with Artificial (rather than natural) Plates, which do shut and open. The Vicugna resembleth a Goat, but greater and more profitable; of the Fleece whereof they make Rugs, Coverings, and Stuffs; and in the Belly finde the Bezoar, sometimes two or three, a sovereign Antidote against Poisons and venomous Diseases. A kinde of Hare resembling a Want in his feet, and a Cat in his tail; under whose chin nature hath fastned a little Bag, which she hath also taught him to use as a Store-house: for in this, having filled his Belly, he preserveth the remnant of his Provision. The Pigritia, a little Beast (not so named for nought) which in fourteen days cannot go so far as a man may easily throw a stone. Then for their Birds, they have them there in such variety of colours, that the Indians will perfectly represent in Feathers whatsoever they see drawn with Pencils: inasmuch as a Figure of S. Francis made of Feathers, was presented to Pope Sixtus Quintus; whose eye could not discern them to be natural colours, but thought them Pencil-work, till he made tryal with his fingers. One called the Tominejo, of all colours, so little that it seems no bigger than a Bee or Butter-fly; the mouth thereof no bigger than the eye of a needle; yet yielding not to the Nightingale in the sweetness of its note and Musick: the Bird and Nest put into Gold Scales, not weighing above 24 grains, yet beautified with Feathers of so many colours, especially in the neck and breast, that the Indians make great use of them in their Feather-pictures. Others as big, as these are little. The Condors of such strength and greatness, that they will fall upon a Sheep or Calf, open it, and eat it. Like Miracles of nature have they in their Fruits and Plants, more proper unto Natural History than to this Discourse: and many medicinal Drugs of rare operation, which I leave to the consideration of the Learned Herbalists. I am too much a Fool to be a Physician, and therefore will not deal in such things as are out of my Element. Yet somewhat of this kind we may chance to meet with, in the Description and Survey of the several Provinces, into which this new World is divided.

The whole is naturally divided into two great Peninsulas; whereof that towards the North is called Mexicana, from Mexico the chief City and Province of it, supposed (for the most Northern parts of it are not yet discovered) to contain 13000 miles in compass. That towards the South, hath the name of Peruana, from the great Country of Peru; the circumnavigation whereof is reckoned at 17000 Italian miles. The Isthmus which joyneth these two together, very long but narrow; in some places not above twelve miles from Sea to Sea; in many not above seventeen. By the Spaniards it is called the Strait of Darien, from a River of that name in Peruana; neer unto the Isthmus: and is so small a Ligament for so great a Body, that some have thought of turning these two Peninsulas into perfect Islands. Certain it is, that many have motioned to the Council of Spain, the cutting of a navigable channel through this small Isthmus, so to shorten their common voyages to China, and the Moluccoes. But the Kings of Spain have not hitherto attempted it; partly because if he should employ the Americans in the work, he should lose those few of them, which his people have suffered to live; partly because the Slaves which they yearly buy out of Africa, do but suffice for the Mines and Sugar-couses; but principally, lest the passage by the Cape of good hope, being left, those Seas might become a receptacle of Pirates. Which doubtless was a very prudent and Politick consideration. Many times I have read of the like attempts begun, but never of any finished. Sesostris King of Egypt, Darius of Persia, one of the Ptolomies, and a late capricious Portugal had the like Plot, to make a passage from the Red-Sea to the Mediterranean: so had Cesar, Caligula, and Nero, Emperours of Rome, upon the Corinthian Isthmus. Another of the same nature had Charles the great, to let the Rhene into the Danow; the like had Lacius Vetus, to joyn the Rhene and the Rosne: all which, in their peculiar places, we have already touched. Nicamor also King of Syria, intended to have made a channel from the Caspian to the Euxine Sea; an infinite project. But neither he nor any of the rest could finish these works; God it seemeth, being not pleased at such proud and haughty enterprizes. And yet perhaps the want of treasure hath not been the least cause, why the like projects have not proceeded: besides the dreadful noyes and apparitions, which (as we have already said) continually affrighted the workmen.

Not less observable than this great but unsuccessful design of cutting a passage through the Isthmus, from one Sea to the other, was that notable, but a like successful Attempt of John Oxenham, an adventurous Englishman, in a passage over it by Land. This man being one of the Followers of Sir Francis Drake, arriving in a small Bark with 70 of his Companions, a little above Nombre di Dios, the chiefest Town of all the Isthmus, drew his Ship on Land, covered it with boughs, and marched over the Land with his Company, guided by Negroes, till he came to a River. There he cut down Wood, made him a Pinnace, entered the South-Sea, went to the Isle of Pearls, where he stayed ten days; intercepted in two Spanish Ships (who feared no Enemy on that side) 60000 pound weight of Gold, 200000 pound weight in bars of Silver, and returned in safety to the Land. And though by the mutiny of some of his own Company, he neither returned into his Country, nor unto his Ship: yet is it an Adventure not to be forgotten, in that never attempted by any other; and by the Spanish Writers recorded with much admiration.

But to return to the Division of this Country; and the two main parts thereof which this Strait uniteth; Mexicana, or the Northern Peninsula, may be most properly divided into the Continents, and Island: the Continent again into the several Provinces of 1 Estotiland, 2 Nova Francia, 3 Virginia, 4 Florida, 5 Californis, 6 Nova Gallicia, 7 Nova Hispania, 8 Guatimala; each of them branched into many subdivisions, and lesser Territories. Peruana, or the Southern Peninsula, taking in some part of the Isthmus, as before we did, hath on the Continent the Provinces of 1 Castella Aurea, 2 Nova Granada, 3 Peru, 4 Chile, 5 Paraguay, 6 Brasil, 7 Gniana, and 8 Paria; with their several members, parts, and particular Regions. The Islands with belong to both, dispersed either in the Southern Ocean, called Mare del Sur; where there is not any one of note, but 1 Those called Los Ladrones, and 2 the Islands of Solomon; or in the Northern Ocean, or Mare del Norte, reduced unto 3 the Caribes, 4 Porto Rico, 5 Hispaniola, 6 Cuba, and 7 Jamaica. In the survey of which particulars we will begin with those which lie on the North-east of this great Continent, not possessed by the Spaniards: and passing thorow the Plantations of such other Nations, as have any footing in the same, come by degrees to the Estates of the King of Spain; that we may lay them altogether without interruption: beginning with Estotiland, the most Northern part, and that which (as some say) was discovered first.

OF ESTOTILAND.

ESTOTILAND, as under that name we comprehend those Regions of Mexicana, which lie most towards the North, and East; hath on the East, the main Ocean; on the South, Canada, or Nova Francia; on the West, some unknown Tract not yet discovered: and on the North, a Bay, or Infer of the Sea, called Hudsons Streits, and called so from Henry Hudson an English man, who by this way endeavoured to find out a more commodious and quick passage to Cathay and China, than had been formerly discovered, It comprehends, 1. Estotiland specially so called. 2. Nova Suedia, and 3. the Isles of Bacalaos.

2 Terra Cortialis. 3 New-found Land, and 4 the Isles of Bacalan.
1. And first Esosiland, Ipecially so called, is the most Northern Region on the East-side of America, lying betwixt Hudsons Streits on the North, and Terra Cortialis on the South. The soyl sufficiently enriched with natural endowments, said to have in it Mines of Gold, and other Metals; but I doubt it lieth too much North for Gold, whatsoever it may do for Brasse and Iron. The people rude and void of goodnes, naked, notwithstanding the extreme cold of the Country; not having either the wit, or the bodies with the skins of those Beasts which they kill by hunting; though their belaire to cover their bodies with the flesh thereof; said by the first Discoverers to sow Corn, to make Beer, or Ale, and to have many Barks of their own with which they traded into Green-land; as also to have many Cities and Castles, some Temples consecrate to their Idols, where they first sacrificed men, and after eat them. The Language which they speak, expressed in Characters of their own; but some knowledge of the Latine tongue there had been amongst them, and Latine books in the Library of one of their Kings, understood by few.

Such were the Reports made of this Country by the first Discoverers, who were certain Fishermen of Freeze-land, cast by a Tempest on this Coast about the year 1350. Six of them only got on Land, where all died save one : who after along wandering from one Princes Court to another, found means to return into his own Country : the King whereof called Zichumi, being a great Adventurer in the feats of Arms, prepared for the further Discovery and Conquest of it. Animated thereunto by the opportune coming of Nicolo and Antonio Zeni, two noble Gentlemen of Venice : who desiring to see the Fashions of the world, furnished a ship at their own charges, and passing the Streits of Gibraltar held their course Northward, with an intent to see England and Flanders. But driven by tempest on this Island, An. 1380. they were kindly welcomed by the King, then newly prosperous in a War against those of Norway : who liked Nicolo so well, that he gave him a command in his Navy, and under his good conduct won many Islands, discovered Green-land, and provided for the conquest of Estotiland also. But Nicolo in the mean time dying, the business was pursued by his brother Antonio, the King in person making one in the undertaking : who liked the Country so well, being once possessed of it, that he built a City in it, and there determining to spend the rest of his days, sent back Antonio unto Freeze-land, with the most of his people.

This is the substance of the story of the first Discovery, published long since by one Francisco Marcellino, out of the Letters of the Zeni: which had they been considered of as they might have been, we had not so long wanted the acquaintance of this part of the World. But whither it were that their reports were esteemed as fabulous by the States of Europe, or that the time was not yet ripe for this great Discovery; there was nothing done in pursuance of it: Zichumi never going back to his own Country, and Freezland not long after conquered by the Kings of Norway. So that the knowledge of it was quite lost again, till these latter dayes. Said in the Letters of the Zeni, to be well stored with Fowl, and the Eggs of Birds, which they found there for their refreshing: the Haven where they landed, to be called Cape Trin; the people to be of small Stature, fearful, and to hide themselves in Caves, at the sight of the Freezlanders: that there was a Mountain alwayes burning, or calving smoak; together with a certain Spring, whence issued a water as black as Pitch; but no such Cities, Forts, and Temples, as the Fishermen spoke of. The Country Weit from Freezland 1000 miles.

spike of. The Country West from Freezeland 1000 miles.

To give you the face of it as it stands at the present, it is said to be well cultivated, fruitful of all necessaries for the life of man, and rich in Metals, but extreme cold : watered with four Rivers, which rising out of an high Mountain in the midst of the Country, disperse themselves over all parts of it. The people said to be more ingenious, of better judgments, and more skilled in most Mechanick Arts, than the rest of the Americans were at the first Discovery ; which argueth some more civil people to have been formerly amongst them. Their Garments of the skins of beasts, or Sea-Calves ; with which also they covered the out-side of their Boats, to keep out the water, and make them able to endure the Sea. What Towns they have, and whither the name of Cape Trin be still remaining, I am not able to discover ; this Country lying still for the most part hidden in a Northern Mist. All we can say, is, that some English names have been imposed of late, on some Capes and Promontories lying on the Northern shores here-of towards Hudsons Streets, by Hudson and such others of the English Nation who pursued that Enterprise : Of which sort are Prince Henrys Foreland, towards the East, almost at the entries of those Streits : and then proceeding towards the West Cape Charls, Kings Foreland ; and last of all, Cape Walsingham, at the end thereof, where these Streits open into a large and capacious Bay, called Hudsons Bay. But of these more particularly in another place ; where we endeavour the Discovery of such parts of the world as are yet unknown, and so within the compass of a Terra incognita.

2. TERRA

2. T E R

2. TERRA CORTERIALIS hath on the North, Estotiland; on the South, Canada, or New-France. So called from Caspar Corterialis, who in the year 1500 left his name unto it. It is called also Terra di Laboradoro, both from the pains required of the Husband-man; and the greate recompence which it gives him: In the same sense; as Campania in the Realm of Naples, is named Terra di Lavoro: By the French, who succeeded in the possession hereof after the Spaniards had forsook it, it was called New-Bretagne; with reference to Bretagne in France, their own natural Country.

The people at the first coming of Corterials were found to be barbarous enough, well coloured, swift of foot, and very good Archers: their clothing of Beasts-skins, their habitations Casas, or some sorry Cottages; their Religion Paganisme, or none; their directions South-Siding. Not so forgetful of the Law which Nature had planted in them; as not to know the necessary use of Mortification extremely to themselves: Better conditioned at the present than in former times; by their near neighbourhood to the French, and commerce with Forerimers: affirmed to be very well disposed to feed most generally on fish, and to adorn themselves with Bracelets of bials, or silver. Their chief Towns, 1. Brefi. 2. Santa Maria. 3. Cabo Marzo, of which little memorable.

3 Cabo Marzo, of which little memorable.

The Country first discovered by Sebastian Cabot; the Son of John Cabot; before mentioned: who in the year 1497. at the Charges and encouragement of King Henry 7th. setting sayl from Bristol; first made the discovery of these parts, as far as to the Latitude of 67 and an half, (which brings Essequitand within the compass also of his discoveries.) The Land which he first saw, he called Prima Vista; and an Island lying before it he called St. Johns, because discovered on the day of St. John Baptists. They found upon the Country plenty of White Bears, Stags greater than ours; Scut-fishes of a yard long, and such store of Cod-fish (which the Inhabitants called Baccalaos) that their multitudes sometimes stayed his ships: hence the occasion of their name. Returning home, he found great preparations for a war in Scotland; so that nothing else was done in this Discovery by the English Nation. But three years after, Gaspard Corterialis a Portuguese, setting sayl from Lisbon, fell upon those parts of Cabots Discoveries, which since bear his name: from whence he brought the piece of a gilded Sword of Italian workmanship, left there most probably by one of the Cabots. Returning again the next year, he was no more heard of: drowned in the Sea, or slain by the Salvages on the Land, as was his brother Michael, in the year next following. Neglected after this, till the French having planted in Canada, or Nova Francia, cast an eye upon it; who gave the name of Brest to a Town hereof, (according to the name of a noted Port in little Bretagne;) but whether they settled any Colony in it, or only did resort unto it in the way of trading, I am not able to determine.

3. NEW-FOUND LAND, (Terra Nova, as the Latines call it) is a great Island, lying on the South of Corterialis; from which parted by a Frith, or Streit, called Golf des Capheaux. So called from the late discovery of it, when discovered first, though it be some scores of years ago: as Wickhams Colledge in Oxford hath the name of New Colledge; though founded divers ages past; because it was the Newest when that name was given.

The dimensions of the Country I have nowhere met with. But for the quantity hereof, it is said to be better inhabited in the North-parts, than in the South; though the South the fitter of the two for habitation. Furnished upon the Sea-coasts with abundance of Cod-fish, as also with Herrings, Salmon, Thornbacks, Smelts, Oysters, and Muscles with Pearls in them. Within the Land a goodly Country, naturally beautified with Roses, sown with Pease, planted with itately Trees, and otherwise diversified, both for pleasure and profit: the Aire hereof never very extreame, more temperate in the depth of winter than with us in England, the Brooks being never so frozen over, that the Ice is able to bear a Dog; and those little Froths but seldom holding three nights together. The people of reasonable stature, full-eyed, broad-faced, but beardless, their face coloured with Oker; their houses, Poles feet round, meeting together in the top, and covered over with skins; an Heartib, or fire-place in the midst; their Boats of Bark, twenty foor-long, and four in breath, not weighing above 100 pound weight; every of which will carry four men, and is by them carried to all the places of their Removes.

Places of most importance in it are the several Havens (of which it is conceived to have more, and more commodious, than any one Iland of the world for the bigness of it :) not beautified with Towns, or buildings, but yielding very safe stations to the greatest ships. The chief whereof 1 Remoua, or Roignefe, on the North of the Promontory called Cape de Raz, the South-east Angle of the Iland; of much resort for fishing, from several Countries, 2 Portus Formosus, or Fair-Haven, three miles North of the other; capable of great ships, and bearing into the main Land above 40 miles. Situate in the Latitude of 40. and 40 minutes. 3 Thornbay, by the Portugals named Enseada Grande. 4 Trinity Bay on the North of Cape S. Francis, by the Portugals called Bahia de la Conception : a large Bay, five miles broad in the narrowest place; yet safe withal and of very good Anchorage. 5 Bona Vista, the name of a Port and Promontory. 6 White-Bay, or Bay-Blanche, as the French call it, safe and capacious, on the North of the Promontory of S. John. Betwixt which and Cape de Grat, on the North-east Angle of the Iland, is no Port of note. Then on the South-side of the Iland, and the West of Cape de Raz, is 7 Port Trespasser. 8 Port Fresence, and 9 Port des Basques (or the Biscains Haven;) and on the West-side, having doubled the Cape de Raze, in the South-west Angle of the Iland, there is 10 S. Georges Bay: all of them safe, capacious, and of great resort.

4. Before the Island, at the distance of 25 leagues from Cape de Ruy, lieth a long bank, or ridge of ground, extended in length many hundred leagues, in breadth 24 leagues where broadest, in other places but sixteen: and all about it certain Islands, which Cabot by one common name called BACALAO S (that name peculiar now unto one alone) from the great multitudes of Cod-fish (by the Natives called Bacalaos) which swarmed hereabouts; so numerous, that they hindered the passage of his ships, as before was noted, and lay in such shoals upon the Coasts, that the Bears caught them with their claws and drew them on land. The Government at that time by Kings, before whom the people in the most formal expressions of duty and reverence used to rub their Noses, or stroke their foreheads: which if the King observed, or accepted of, and meant to grace the party which had so adored him, he turned his head to his left shouldier, as a mark of favour.

The first Discoverers of this Country (but not known then to be an Island) were the two Cabots, John, and his son Sebastian, employed herein by Henry the 7th. 1497. as before was noted. The business being laid aside at his coming back, was afterwards revived by Thorn and Eliot, two of Bristol: who taking a more perfect view of it than was took by the Cabots, ascribed to themselves the discovery of it, and animated King Henry the 8. unto the enterprise: which was done An. 1527. but with ill success. In the mean time the Normans, Portugals, and Britons of France had resorted to it; and changed the names which by the English had been given to the Bays and Promontories. But the English would not so relinquish their pretensions to the Premier Seign. And therefore in the year 1583. Sir Humphrey Gilbert took possession of it in the name of the Queen of England, interdicted all other Nations the use of fishing, and intended to have settled there an English Colony. But being wracked in his return, the sending of the Colony was discontinued till the year 1608. when undertook by John Guy a Merchant of Bristol, who most successfully performed it: the Colony so prospering in a little time, that they had Wheat, Rye, Turneps, Coleworts, of their own sowing; some probability of Metals, a certainty of Sables, Musk, and other precious Commodities, besides their fishing; though that the great occasion of their settling there. Such plenty is there found of Ling and Cod-fish, all about the Coasts, that ordinarily our men take 200 or 300 of them within four hours space; which they convey from hence to all parts of Europe.

C A N A D A.

CANADA is bounded on the North, with Cortierialis; on the South, with New-England; on the East, with the Main Ocean; the Countries lying on the West, either not yet discovered; or not perfectly known. So called from the River Canada, the greatest, not of this Province only, but of all this Peninsula. A River which hath its Fountain in the undiscovered parts of this Northern Tract: sometimes enlarged into great Lakes, and presently reduced to a narrower channel, with many great windings and Reaches in it. Having embosomed almost all the rest of the Rivers of this Country, it emptieth it self into the Great Bay of St. Lawrence, over against the Isle of Assumption, being at the mouth 40 leagues in breadth, and 150 fathom deep.

It is also called Nova Francia from the French, who following the tract of Cabot, and Cortierialis, made a further Discovery of these parts, and planted several Colonies in them. The business first undertaken by Jaques Cartier, An. 1534. received here gladly by the Natives with singing, dancing, and expressing much sign of joy: pursued by Monsieur Roberval, sent thither in the year 1542. by King Francis the first, not only to discover the Country, but to plant some part of it, who built there a fair Fortrefs for his great safety; followed therein by divers others of that Nation, in their several times.

The nature of the soil, and people, we shall best discover in the several parts of it; each differing from one another, and so not easily conformed to a general Character. Look we now only on the principal Rivers of the whole, 1 Canada, of which before, 2 Pemegonet or Norumbegue, as some call it, of which more hereafter. 3 Quimbeque falling into the Ocean as the others do, 4 Rio S. John, ending its course in a large Bay called Bay Francoise, interposed betwixt Nova Scotia and the rest of this Country. 5 Les trois Rivières, which rising far North, and passing through two great Lakes, falleth into the Canada, 6 Saguenay, of the same Original Course, and Fall. A River of so strong a Current, that it suffereth not the Sea to flow up its Channel; so deep, that in many places it attaineth to 100 Fathoms; and though but narrow at the mouth, yet groweth it broader and broader upwards; and having received many lesser streams, looseth it self at last, where the other doth.

It containeth in it several Regions of Nova Francia, specially so called, 2 Nova Scotia, 3 Norumbegue, and 4 the Isles adjoining.

1. NOVA FRANCIA specially so named, is situate on the South of Cortierialis; and on the North of the great River Canada, towards the East; but on both sides of it, in the Western and more inland parts. The Country naturally full of Stags, Bears, Hares, Martens and Foxes, whose flesh the People did eat raw (till more civilized) having first dried it either in the smoak or Sun; as they do their Fish. They have also store of Conies, Fowl and Fish great plenty; one Fish more memorable than the rest, which they call Adobuel, whose body and head is like that of a Grey-hound. But their greatest Jewels are their Chains of Esgurrie; a shell-fish of the whitest colour, excellent for the itching of blood: which they fashion into Beads and Bracelets, and so wear, or sell them. Not very plentiful of fruits, or fit for tillage; yet it breedeth some Corn, and of Pulse good plenty. The Air more cold than in other Countries of like height, partly by reason of the greatness of the River, which being wholly of fresh water, and so large withal, chilleth the Air on both sides of it; partly because of the abundance of Ice, and those hills of Snow, which the North-winde passeth over in the way to this Country.

The People, when the French first discovered them, very rude and barbarous; few of them furnished with houses, but removing from one place to another, as their food decayed; and carrying all their goods with them (a thing easily done) upon those removes. Such as lived towards the Sea, or the greater Rivers, somewhat better housed. For in the day time they fish in their Boats; which they draw unto the Land at night, and turning them upside down, sleep under them. As ill apparelled as housed; for they went all naked, except a little piece of skin before their Privities. Some of them had their heads quite shaven, excepting one Bush of hair on the top of the Crown, which they suffered to grow to the length of an Horsés Tail, tied up with Leather-strings in a knot. Each man allowed his two or three wives a piece; and they so constant to their Husband, that they never marry after his death, but keep themselves continually in a mourning habit: a vizard as it were, made of Grease and Coal-dust, which they spread over all their bodies. The women labour more than the men, both in fishing and husbandry; digging the ground instead of Ploughing, with certain pieces of wood, where they sow their Maiz. (a Plant of which they maketh their bread, in most parts of America.) Idolaters in general before the coming of the French, as they are most of them at this day; the French and others which have planted in these Northern parts, having added little more unto Christianity, than by the Colonies they brought with them. Yet in the midst of this darkness they saw so much light, as to believe that when they died they went immediately to the Stars; from thence conveyed to certain green and pleasant fields, full of flowers and fruits. Plain Evidence that they believed the immortality of the soul, and that there was some place appointed for reception of it.

The chief Towns of it at that time, 1 Hochelega, round in figure, compassed about with three Courses

Nova Scotia. Course of timber Ramparts, one within the other; sharp at the top, about two Rods high, with one gate only to give entrance, and that well fortified (in their kind) with Piles and Bars. It had in it 50 great houses, in the midst of every one a Court, and in the middle of that Court a place which they made their fire on. Situate far within the Land, about six or seven leagues from the banks of the River Canada, in the most pleasant part of the Country; and therefore made the seat of their King, whom they highly revered, and carried him on their shoulders sitting on a Carpet of skins. 2 Stadae, or Stadacone, and 3 Quebecque, which the French call S. Croix, on the course of the same River also; this last Colony of the French. 4 Tadonfac, a safe but small Haven, not capable of above 20 ships, at the mouth of Sagunay. 5 Francis Roy, a Castle built by Monsieur Roburval, when he came first into this Country. 6 S. Lewis, designed for a French Colony by Monsieur de Champlain, that he left his name to a great Lake of this Country (tull of little Islands) in the Lands of the Iroquois, inhabiting on the South of the River Canada, into which it emptieth it self at the last.

2. NOVA SCOTIA containeth that part of the Countries of Canada, or Nova Francia, which the French call Acadie, or Cadie, (being a Peninsula or Demy-Island;) with so much of the main land as lieth between the River Canada and the large Bay called Bay-Francoise, from the River of S. Croix upon the West, to the Isle of Assumption on the East. So called by King James, in the Grant of these Countries to Sir William Alexander, after Lord Secretary of Scotland, and by King Charles for his approved fidelity most deservedly created Earl of Sterling. The Letters-Patents of which Donation bear date Anno 1621. What time the French having been outed of their holds here, by Sir Sam. Argal Governor of Virginia, had abandoned the South-parts of Canada, and betook themselves more into the North, and the higher parts of the Course of that River. And in pursuance of this Grant, the said Sir William Alexander in the year 1622. sent a Colony hither: and having procured a new Map to be made of the Country, caused the Peninsula, lying on this side of the Bay Francoise, to be called Nova Caledonia; that on the North thereof, to be called Nova Alexandria; giving new names also unto most of the Ports and Promontories. For the better accomplishment of which business, he obtained also a Patent for advancing a certain number of persons to the hereditary dignity of Baronets, or Knights of Nova Scotia, as we call them commonly; distinguished from others by a Ribbin of Orange tawney: the money raised upon which Patent, was to be wholly employed towards this Plantation. But being unable with those helps (as certainly Plantations are of too great burden for a private person) or willing to employ his money to more profit, he sold Port-Royal to the French; and after discontinued his endeavours in it.

Places of most importance in it. 1 Port-Royal, in Acadie or Nova Caledonia, on the Bay-Francoise, once made a Colony of the French by Monsieur de Monts, An. 1604. continued with much difficulty till the year 1613. when destroyed by Sir Samuel Argal then Governor of the English Plantations in Virginia, by reason that the Jesuits, whose neighbourhood he liked not, had begun to nest there. Sold since again unto the French, as before is said, by whom still possessed. 2 S. Lukes Bay, by the French called Port au Monton. 3 Gaspé, a noted Port in New-Alexandria, opposite to the Isle of Assumption. 4 Gachepe, on a fair Bay in the same Coast also.

3. NORUMBEGA hath on the North-East, Nova Scotia; on the South-West, Virginia. The air is of a good temper, the soil fruitful, and the people indifferently civil, all of them, as well men as women, painting their faces. The men are much affected to hunting, and therefore never give their daughters to any, unless he be well skilled in that game also. The women are here very chaste, and so well love their husbands, that if at any time they chance to be slain, the widows will neither marry, nor eat flesh, till the death of their husbands be revenged. They both dance much; and for more nimbleness, sometimes stark naked. The Sea upon the Coasts so shallow and so full of Sands, that it is very ill sailing all along these shores. The Towns, or Habitations rather, so differently called by the French, Portuguese, and Spaniards, that there is not much certainty known of them. Yet most have formerly agreed upon Norumbega, or Arampec, as the Natives call it; said to be a large, populous and well built Town, and to be situate on a fair and capacious River of the same name also: But later Observations tell us there is no such matter; that the River which the first Relations did intend, is called Pempegouet, neither large nor pleasant; and that the place by them meant is called Agguncia, so far from being a fair City, that there are only a few Sheds or Cabins, covered with the barks of trees, or the skins of beasts. Howsoever I have let it stand on the first reports, it being possibly enough that the Town might fall into decay, deserted on the coming of so many several Pretenders; and that the Sheds, or Cabins which the last men speak of, may be only the remainders of it.

4. Adjoining to these Countries of Canada, are several Islands not joyned in any common name, but yet deserving some consideration in this place and time. The principal whereof, 1. NATISCOTE, called the Isle of Assumption, situate in the very mouth of the River, was first discovered by Jacques Carter, An. 1534. in length 35 leagues, seven, or eight in breadth. The Island very plain and level, of a fruitful soil, beautified with trees of several sorts, replenished with great plenty both of Fowl and Fish, and furnished with convenient Rods, though with no good Havens. Not hitherto inhabited, for ought I can finde. 2. RAMÉE, a frie of little Islands in the great Gulf of St. Lawrence on the South of Natiscote, first found out, or frequented by the Citizens of St. Mala in Bretagne, An. 1590. of great resort for the Morfe fishing, used upon the Coasts, which is here so gainful, that a French Bark in a very little time killed 1500 of them. These Morfes (take this by the way) are a kind of Sea-Horses, or Sea-Oxen; with two teeth of a foot long growing downwards out of the upper Jaw, sold dearer than Ivory, because esteemed a Sovereign Antidote against poysons. They have also four feet, no Ears, the Horns about half an ell in length; the skin when dressed, twice as thick as that of a Bull; their flesh when young, as sweet and tender as Veal. So fat and unctuous, that with the bellies of five of them; there is made usually an Hogs-Head of Train Oil, as good as that of the Whale. 3. BRIOTON, a small Island on the South of the Ramee, about two leagues in length, and as many in breadth; of a rich soil, far pasturage, well shaded with tall and lofty Trees; and neighboured by a smaller Island called Iste-Blanche, of the like fertility. 4. BRIOTON, (Insula Britonum) so named from Jacques Briton a Frenchman, in the time of Francis the first, called also the Island of St. Lawrence, is situate on the South-East of the Isle of Brien: in form triangular, in compass about 80 leagues; pleasant and fruitful, though for the most part swelled with hills. Delitute of Rivers, but interlaced with great Arms of the Sea, well stored with shell-fish; and in the midst thereof a great Lake full of little Islands: the Woods replenished with plenty of Deer, black Foxes, and a bird called Penguin. Inhabited by the Natives only, though the Portuguese did sometimes endeavour a Plantation in it; but finding the Air too cold for them, they again deserted it. The chief Haven is by the English called Newport; by the French Port aux Anglois, from the great resort of the English to it, in regard of their fishing. 5. ISLE DE SABEL, by the French so called from the Sands which lie high about it; distant from the Breton-Isle about 30 leagues to the South; 15 leagues in compass, but more long than broad, and of unsafe landing. The planting of it, in regard of the safety of the place, attempted twice by the French, and once by the Portuguese; but without success. 6 Others of less note, as Menego, and Les Isles des Oisieux, I pass over purposely, there being nothing, or but little to be spoken of them.

So it appears by this account, that though the French have given the name of Nova Francia to all these Countries; yet they never had the honour of the first discovery, wherein the English and Portuguese had precedence of them: nor are possessed of any considerable part thereof, the Scots putting in for a large share; the English Masters of the best Ports, and all the Islands of the Country in the hands of the Salvages. Of these some great and powerful Nations over-sway the rest. The chief whereof are the Troquois on the North-East of Norumbega, neighboured by the Ochataignins, the Albomequins, and the Neukerines, the Souriquois, and Eschimbins of Acadie, and New Alexandria: the Montagnets, and the Atogovantans, on the banks of the Canada. All of them stout and hardy people, false of their words, treacherous in their practices, and merciless in their revenges. So well acquainted with the factions and divisions of Europe, that they know how to make use of one Nation against another; and by that means to keep themselves in their first estate, without being subject unto any. So that the footing which the English, French, or Scots have obtained amongst them, serves rather to secure themselves in the way of their Trading, than to entitle them unto any possession, or command in the Country; the French being shut up in a few weak Forts on the North of the Canada; the Scots pretending only to a Bay or two in the South of Acadie; and the English being only Tenants at the will of the Natives, for such convenience of fishing as they have in the adjoining Islands.

VIRGINIA.

VIRGINIA hath on the North, Canada; on the South, Florida; on the East, Mare del Noort; the Western boundaries not known, or not well discovered, as will appear by the Survey of its several Provinces; Premising first that Virginia in the full latitude thereof extendeth from the 34th. Degree where it joyns with Florida, unto the 44th. where it quartereth on Norumbega.

The Inland parts hereof are mountainous and barren, full of thick woods, a Receptacle for wilde beasts, and wilder Salvages. Towards the Sea more plain and fruitful, as will appear by the Survey of its several Provinces; Premising first that Virginia in the full latitude thereof extendeth from the 34th. Degree where it joyns with Florida, unto the 44th. where it quartereth on Norumbega.

The first Discovery hereof by the two Cabots, Father and Son, An. 1497. did first entitle the Crown of England to this Country. The Design after seconded by Mr. Hare, bringing thence certain of the petit Kings, or Princes hereof, who did Homage to King Henry the 8th. then sitting in his Royal Throne in the Palace of Westminster: but nothing further done in pursuance of it. And though John Verazzani a noble Florentine, at the incouragement and charge of King Francis the first, Anno 1524. discovered more of the Country then Cabot did; yet the French too much in love with the pleasures of France, or intangled in Civil wars amongst themselves, looked no further after it: Insomuch that the Country lying thus neglected, was re-discovered by the charges and direction of Sir Walter Raleigh, then Captain of the Guard, and in great power and favour with Queen Elizabeth, Anno 1584. who sending Master Philip Amadas, and Master Arthur Barlow upon this employment, did by them take possession of it in Queen Elizabeth's name; in honour of whom he caused it to be called Virginia. The next year he sent hither a Colony, under the conduct of the noble Sir Richard Greenvile: who not supplied with necessaries for their subsistence, returned home again. In the year 1587. a second Colony is sent hither, but as successless as the first: the business being undertaken only on a private Purse, not owned as the interest of the State, or of publick moment, till the year 1606. In the mean time the North parts of this Country being more perfectly discovered by Captain Bartholomew Gosnold, An. 1602. and the middle parts being taken up by the Hollanders not long after, that is to say, in the year 1609. the whole became divided into these three parts. 1 New-England. 2 Novum Belgium. 3 Virginia strictly and specially so called. To which the Isles of the Bermudas shall come in for a fourth.

NEW-ENGLAND hath on the North-East, Norumbega; and on the South-West, Novum Belgium. So called by the Adventurers by whom first planted, not so much because opposite to Nova Albon, as some men conceive; as in imitation of the like adjuncts of distinction, given by the French and Spaniards, to Nova Francia, Nova Hispania, Nova Gallicia, Nova Granada, and the like.

The Country situate in the middle of the Temperate Zone, betwixt the degrees of 41. and 44. equally distant from the Arctic Circle, and the Tropick of Cancer; by consequence, naturally of the same degree of heat with France, or Italy. But by reason of the thick mists which arise from the Seas adjoining, those heats so moderated, that the Air is found to be exceedingly agreeable to an English body. The soil not only fruitful of such Commodities as grow there naturally; but also of all sorts of Grain which were brought from England. Great store of Woods, and Trees, both for fruit and building; plenty of Deer within the Woods, of Salt and Fish upon the shores; and as for Turkies, Partridges, Swans, Geese, Cranes, Ducks, Pigeons, such a full variety, as serves not only for necessity, but for Pride and Luxury. The Commodities of most note for maintaining of Traffick, rich Furs, and many sorts of Fish, some Amber, Flax, Linnen, Iron, Pitch, Malts, Cables, Timber fit for shipping; in a word, whatsoever comes to England by the way of the Sound, might be at better rates, and with far less trouble be supplied from hence; at least, if we believe the Relations of it, published in the year 1622.

The people for the most part well enough disposed, if not roughly handled; hospitable, and more civil than the rest of their Neighbours. So tractable and docile in matters of Religion, that liking well the Rites and Ceremonies of the English, at their first settling there, An. 1608. they would use to say that King James was a good King, and his God a good God, but their Tanto naught. Which Tanto was an evil spirit, which did haunt and trouble them every Moon, and therefore they worshipped him for fear. Which notwithstanding, I find not any great increase of Christianity amongst the Natives: our English Undertakers thinking it sufficient if they and their houses served the Lord, without caring what became of the Souls of the wretched people, which hitherto have sate in darkness and the shadow of death, notwithstanding those New lights which have shined amongst them. And as for those New-comers which have planted there all English, though some immediately out of Holland; I cannot better tell you of what strain they were, than in the words of John de Laet, Novi Orbis lib. 3. cap. 8. where he observeth, Primos hosce Colonos, uti & illos qui postea accesserunt, potissimum aut omnino fuisse ex eorum hominum Secta, quos in Anglia Brownistas & Puritanos vocant, quales non pauci & in Belgium superioribus annis se receperunt, & hinc ad socios sunt profecti. They were (saith he) either for the most part, part, or altogether of that Self, which in England are called Brownists or Puritans; many of which had formerly betaken themselves to Holland, but afterwards went thence to joyn with their Brethren in New-England.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1 Tamescot, where our men found Oysters of nine inches long. 2 Nansic, a River of the Tarentines, one of the chief Nations of this tract. 3 Sagadahoc, of most note, and deservedly too. Of a mile and an half broad at the mouth or influx, and so upwards for the space of a dayes journey: where it maketh a large Lake three dayes journey broad, with six Islands in it; nourished with two large Channels, the one from the North-east, the other from the North-west, each of them rising from a Lake, the least of which four dayes journey long, two broad, the other double it. Of less note, 4 Apanawapick, 5 Ramassoc, 6 Alhamabaga, &c.

The Country on the Sea-side full of notable Havens, populous, and very well inhabited, in somuch as Captain Smith reckoned in the space of 70 miles above twenty Havens, some of them capable of 500, or 1000 sail: most of them sheltered from the furies of wind and Sea, by the interposition of some Islands, of which about 200 lie upon that Coast. In the space of 70 miles he reckoneth forty Villages of the Barbarous people, the chief of which, 1 Macadacut, 2 Segocket, 3 Pemmaquid, 4 Nusconcus, 5 Kennebecque, &c. all called by the name of some Brook, or water, upon which they were seated. Since added by the English, 1 S. Georges Fort, the first Plantation of the English, built by them at the mouth of the River Sagadahoc, in a Demy-Island, An. 1607. 2 New Plimouth, seated in a large and capacious Bay; at the first building (An. 1620.) consisting of nineteen families only, but in short time improved to an handom Town: which as it was the first Town, so it was the first Church which was seled there, modelled according to the form of Mr. Robinsons Church in Holland, (that notorious Separatist), and after made a pattern to the rest of these Churches: each absolute and Independent in it self, without subordination unto any Superior. For my part, I behold Episcopacy as the Primitive Government of the Church of Christ. But if there were no other Pretenders to it, than Presbytery, and Independencie; I should as soon look for the Scepter and Throne of Christ (as they please to phrase it) in the Co-ordination of New-England, as in the Presbyteries of Geneva, or the Kirk of Scotland. 3 Bristol, upon the Sea-side also, but more North than Plimouth. 4 Barstable, so called with reference to a noted Sea-town of that name in Devonshire; as 5 Boston, with like reference to as noted a Sea port in Lincolnshire. 6 Quillipiack, on the Bay of Massachusetts; a Town of an old name, but a new Plantation.

This part of Virginia first discovered by Captain Gosnold, An. 1602. and the next year more perfectly served by some of Bristol; was by King James An. 1606. granted unto a certain Corporation of Knights, Gentlemen, and Merchants, to be planted and disposed of for the publike; Sir John Popham, then Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, being one of the Chief also in that Commission. By his encouragement, and principally at his charge, a Colony was sent thither, An. 1607. under the Prelidency of Captain George Popham, and Raleigh Gilbert, who built the Fortrefs of S. George at the mouth of Sagadahoc. But the President dying the next year, and not long after him the Chief Justice also, the Colony despairing of good success, returned home again. Successfully again attempted, An. 1614. the Undertakers were resolved to make further tryal of their fortune; and in the year 1616. sent out eight ships more: but it never settled into form till the year 1620. when by the building of New-Plimoth, and some encouragements sent thence to bring others on, it grew in very short time to so swift a growth, that no Plantation for the time ever went beyond it. The growth of Old Rome and New-England had the like foundation: both Sanctuaries, Ad qua turba omnis ex finitimis gentibus novarum rerum cupida conflavit, as Livy telleth us of the one; resorted to by such of the neighbouring Nations, as longed for innovations in Church and State.

2. NOVUM BELGIUM, or NIEU-NEDERLANDT, hath on the North-east New-England; on the South-west Virginia, specially so called. So named from the Netherlanders, who began their Plantation in it, An. 1614. the Country being then void, and consequently open to the next Pretender, according to that Maxime in the Civil laws, Que nullius sunt, in bonis dantur occupantibus. And yet they had some better title than a bare Intrusion, having bought Hudsons Cards and Maps, and otherwise contented him for the charge and pains of his Discovery, An. 1609. of which more anon.

This part of the Country extended from the 38 degree and an half, to the 41. 15. of a good temperate both of Air and soil: fruitful of those things which the earth brought forth of its own accord; abundance of wild Grapes, and Nuts, Trees of great height and bulk for shipping; plenty of Herbage; store of plants, the effects of nature: and where the people did their part, such increase of Maize (a plant of which they make their Bread) as shewed their care and industry to be well bestowed. Since the planting of the Hollanders there, abundantly well furnished (within their command) with Wheat and other sorts of Grain; as also with Flax, Hemp, and such other Commodities, as were brought hither out of Europe. The Woods replenished with Deer, and the Plains with Fowl; the Rivers not inferiour to any, in Senegons, Salmons, and other the best sort of Fish, which can swim in the water.

The people, though divided into many Nations, and of different Languages, are much of the same disposition with the other Salvages. Clad in Beasts-skins, for the most part without certain dwellings; and dwelling together many Families of them under one poor roof, made of Poles meeting at the top, and covered with the bark of Trees. Their household stuff a Tobacco-Pipe, a Wooden-dish, and an Hatchet made of a broad flint; their weapons, Bow and Arrows, but their Arrows made or headed with the bones of fishes. Their Religion Idolatry, or worse; their chief God the Devil, whom they worship under the name of Menetto; but with less pomp and Ceremony than is used in Africk. Of manners, fearful and suspicious (not without good cause) wonderful greedy of revenge; but if well used, tractable and obedient unto their Superiours; fickle, but very faithful unto those who trust them; conceived conceived to be inclinable to the Christian Faith, if they had fallen into the hands and command of those who had studied godliness more than gain.

Rivers of note they have not many. That want supplied by many large and capacious Bayes, all along the Coast; the principal of those that be 1. Mainhutes, by some called N. Jovius, but by the Dutch commonly Nord-Rivier, which falleth into the Sea at May-Port; so called by Cornelius May the Master of a ship of Holland, at their first Plantation; another Channel of it, which from the noise thereof they call Hell-gate, emptying it self against an Island called the Isle of Nats. The River about 15. or 16 fathom deep, at the mouth thereof, affordeth a safe Road for shipping, but of difficult entrance. 2. Swad-Rivier, so called, because more Southerly than the other; as fair as that, but hitherto not so well discovered.

Towns here are few either of the old or New Plantations. The Natural Inhabitants live together in Tribes, many Families of those Tribes under one Roof, as before was said; but those Families to remove from one another, that their Habitations are not capable of the name of a Town, and hardly of a scattered Village. Nor do I find that either the Hollanders or the English (who now divide the whole among them) are much given to Building. The title of the Dutch being subject unto some disputes; and the Possession of the English not confirmed, and sealed. Huafish an Englishman, had spent some time in the Discovery of this Country, and given his name to one of the Rivers of it: With him the Hollanders An. 1609. as before is said, compounded for his Charts, and Maps, and whatsoever he could challenge in the right and success of that his Voyage. But they were hardly warm in their new habitations, when Sir Samuel Arkel, Governour of Virginia, specially so called (having dispossessed the French of that part of Canada, now called Nova Scotia; An. 1613.) disputed the possession with them; alleging that Hudson, under whose Sale they claimed that Country, being an Englishman, and licensed to discover those Northern parts by the King of England, could not alienate or dismember it (being but a part or Province of Virginia) from the Crown thereof. Hereupon the Dutch Governour submits himself and his Plantation to his Majesty of England, and the Governour of Virginia for; and under him. But a new Governour being sent from Amsterdam in the year next following, not only failed in paying the conditioned Tributes; but began to fortify himself, and entitle those of Amsterdam to a just propriety. To which end, he gave unto the Country the name of New-Netherland, conferred new names on all the Bays and Rivers of it; and possessed himself of a little Island near that Branch of the Nord-Rivier, which themselves call Hell-gate: where he laid the foundation of a Town, called New-Amsterdam; and built a Fortress by the name of Orange Fort, which he garrisoned; and planted with five pieces of Cannon; Complaining whereof being made unto King Charles, and by him represented to the States of Holland: it was declared by the said States in a publick instrument, that they were no wayes interested in it, but that it was a private undertaking of the West-Indian Company of Amsterdam; and so referred it wholly to his Majesties pleasure. Which being declared, a Commission was forthwith granted to Sir George Calvert, Lord Baltimore, to plant the Southern parts thereof, which lie next Virginia, by the name of MARY-LAND; the like not long after to Sir Edmund Pleydon, for planting and possessing the more Northern parts which lie towards New-England, by the name of New-Albion. And though the Hollanders did then seem willing to be gone, and leave all they had there, for the sum of 2500. l. yet taking advantage of the troubles which not long after followed in England, they have not only raised their demands to a greater height; but furnished the Native Indians with Arms, and taught them how to use their Weapons. A most mischievous and wicked Act; not only tending to the damage and discomfitment of the present Adventurers, but even unto the extirpation of all Christians out of all these Countries: But the best is they were the first that smarted by it. The Salvages thus armed and trained, fell fowl upon them, destroying their Farm-Houses, and forcing them to betake themselves to their Ports and Fastnesses: What hath been since done (for the giving of new names to some of the old places, I look on as a thing of nothing) either in getting out the Dutch, or planting Colonies of the English, I can hardly say; but I fear that little will be acted or to little purpose, till it be made a work of more publick interest.

3. VIRGINIA specially so called, hath on the North-East Nieu-Netherland; on the South-west, Florida; the name restrained to this part only, since the two last Plantations, which before was common to the whole. The Country lieth extended from the 34. to the 38. degree of Northern Latitude: by consequence the Aire inclined unto heats, if not refreshed and moderated by a constant Gale of Eastern winds, which they call the Brize, and the blasts driving on it from the open Seas. Diversified most pleasantly into hills and valleys; the Mountains clothed with woods, and the Fields with fruits. The soil so fruitful, that an Acre of Land well ordered will return 200 Bushels, or 25 Quarter of Corn. Said also to be rich in veins of Allom, as also Pitch, Turpentine, store of Cedars, Grapes, Oyl, plenty of sweet Gums, several sorts of Plants for the Dyers use, some Mines of Iron and Copper, of Timber trees almost infinite numbers; as also great abundance of Cattel, Fish, Powl, Fruit, and of Malz no scarcity. Some Christal found amongst the Mountains, on the shore some Pearls; nothing deficient either in the soil, or Aire, for the encouragement and reward of a thriving Nation.

The People are but few in number for so large a Country, and those as different in size, as in speech or manners; some of them whom they call Sasques-hanoxi, of so vast a greatness, that in comparison of the English they seemed as Gyants: clad with the skins of Bears and Wolves in so strange manner, that the head of the Beast hung before their breasts instead of a Jewel; their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and a Club. Some on the other side, whom they call Wigocomock, of so low a stature, that in relation to the other, they appear as Dwarves. But generally they are all of tall stature, well limbed; for the most part without Beards; and the one half of the head kept shaven: clothed in loose Mantles made of the skins of Deer, with an Apron of the same to hide their nakedness; the rest of their Bodies painted over over with figures of Serpents, or of some other Creature of a horrid shape. Strong and accustomed to the cold, which they patiently endure, or feel not: wavering and inconstant, crafty, and somewhat more industrious than the rest of the Salvages; but given to anger, and as greedy of revenge as any. Gods they have many, for they worship all things (and them only) which are like to hurt them; as Fire, Water, Lightning, Thunder, &c. So that it may be said of them, as once Lactantius said of the ancient Romans (did not the ignorance of these poor Wretches render them excusable, and make them fitter objects for our Prayers and pity, than our scorn) Dignissimi homines qui Deos suos semper haberent presentes. One Devil-God above all the rest (they call him Oke) whom they worship, as themselves confess, more for fear than love. Not yet converted from these horrible and gross Idolatries, by the long neighbourhood of the English; accused in that respect most justly by those of Rome.

No Country for the bigness of it can be better watered, or yield fairer Rivers. The principal of which 1. Pawhatan (so called by the name of that petit Roiteles, whose Territory it passeth through) which having run a course of an hundred miles, and Navigable all that way by smaller Veils, is at his fall into the Sea about three miles broad. 2. Apamatuck. 3. Nansamund, and 4. Chikabamania, all Tributaries to the Sea about three miles broad. 5. Pamunke, fourteen miles more North than Pawhatan, but of lesser note. 6. Topah-mock, Navigable 130 miles. 7. Patawomeck, passable by Boat 140 miles, and six or seven miles broad, where it falleth into the Sea; increased by many lesser streams which come out of the Mountains, and generally well stored with Fish. 8. Pantuxcut, of a shorter Race, but a deeper Channel than moit of the former (16 or 18 fathom deep) and of more choice of Fish than the others are.

Along the Banks of these Rivers dwell their several Tribes, scarce any one of which making up an hundred men (that of Patawomeck excepted, which is able to arm after their manner 160) many not yielding above 30. and some not so many. Their habitations not containing above ten or twelve houses a piece, but in those houses sundry particular families are for the most part covered with the Barks of Trees; so placed, that the common Market place standeth in the midst, at an equal distance: the houses of their Weroances (or the Chiefs of their Tribes) and that which serveth them for a Temple, being somewhat finer than the rest. And of these habitations some are presented to us by the names of Oomoke, by the English called the blind Town. 2. Pemoke. 3. Shyconke, said by my Authors to be Civitas ampla, a large City, but we must understand him with Relation to the rest of this Country. 4. Chovanoek. 5. Secatan. 6. Mattaken. 7. Weopomioke. 8. Pyskokonok, said to be inhabited by none but women. 9. Chipano. 10. Muscumunge, both upon the Sea; moit of them called by the name of those several Tribes which inhabit in them.

In reference to the English and their Plantations, we are to know that they made choice of the South-side of a large and goodly Bay, for the place of their dwelling. A Bay which thrusting it self a great way up into this Country, and receiving into it many of the Rivers before mentioned, is by the Natives called Chesepack, and yeldeth the only safe entrance into this part of the Country: the Capes thereof for that cause fortified by the English; that on the Southern point being called Cape Henry, and the other Cape Charles, according to the names of the two young Princes. Towns of moit note which have been either since built, or frequented by them. 1. James Town (Jacobopolis, so named in honour of King James), on the South-side of that Bay, not far from the River Chikabamania: first founded in the year 1606. at what time it was trenched about, and some Ordnance planted on the Works. 2. Henric Town (Henricopolis) so named in honour of Prince Henry, the eldest son of King James, built in a convenient place more within the Land, 18 miles from James Town. 3. Dales-gift, so called, because built and planted at the charge of Sir Thomas Dale, An. 1610. 4. Bermuda, an open Burrough five miles from Henricopolis. 5. Keoughtan, a noted and frequented Port in the Bay of Chesepack, very much traded by the English. 6. Wicocomoco the chief Town of Pawhatan, one of the Roiteles of this Country; much courted by the English at their first settling here, and a long time after: a Crown being sent him by King James with many other rich presents, the better to sweeten and oblige him; but for all that he proved a treacherous and unfaithful Neighbour.

The sum of the affairs of this last Plantation, is, that the business being resumed in the year 1606. and a Commission granted to certain Noblemen and Merchants to advance the work; they fell in hand, by the Counsel and encouragement of Captain Smith, with the building of James Town (having first fortified Cape Henry) in which Town he fixed a Colony of 100 men. These being almost consumed by Famine and other miseries, were the next year recruited with 120 more brought by Captain Newport: but a Fire having casually consumed their Houses, once again discouraged them. But the Houses being reedified, and a Church added to the Houses, by the industry of Smith their Governour, the Colony began to flourish, and to increase in reputation amongst the Salvages: especially having made (as they believed) a friend of Pawhatan. In the year 1609. the Lord De la Ware was appointed Governour, and Smith commanded to return; who left here 490 persons, (and of them 200 expert Souldiers) 3 Ships, 7 Boats, 24 great Guns; 300 Muskets, with Victuals and Ammunition necessary; and 39 of their Weroances, or Petit-Kings Tributaries, and Contributors to the English. Sir Thomas Gates and Sir George Summers, sent thither with 9 ships and 500 men, lost a great part of their numbers in the Isle of Bermudaz: the rest not well according with the old Plantation, were at the point of returning home, when happily the Lord De la Ware arrived with three ships more, Anno 1610. But falling into a desperate sickness, and come home to England, he recommended the estate of the English there to Sir Thomas Dale, who furnished them with Men, Cattel, and other necessaries: after whom came Sir Thomas Gates with 300 men, and some heads of Cattel. And then the Government hereof being conferred on Henry Earl of Southampton, the affairs here began to settle in a prosperous way: when unexpectedly on Henry falling on them (fearing no such treachery) killed 340 of their men; and Bermudaz. and had also then surprized James Town, if one of the Savages, who had received the Christian Faith, had not discovered their intention. Since that, recovered of that blow, it went happily forwards: and might by this time have been raised to some power and greatness; if the English by diverting on some by-Plantations, and by employing indigent and necessitous persons in so great a work, had not discouraged the design. For certainly one might say of this Plantation; as the Scripture doth of the Camp of David in the time of Saul, that few, or none were sent unto it (except the principals) but such as were in distress, or debt, or some way or other discontented: men never likely to advance and pursue a business of such publick interests. Commendable howsoever in this particular, (though perhaps that commendation do belong to their Governours) that being here, they kept themselves constantly to those Forms of Worship which were established and observed in the Church of England.

As for the Natives of the whole, they were divided (as was said) into several Tribes, every Tribe under the command of their several Chiefs: which Chiefs, though many in number, and of little power, knew well enough how to keep their State unto their Subjects, and to shew it also unto strangers. For when Powhatan was pleased to give audience unto Captain Newport, and the rest of the English sent from Smith, they found him upon a Bed of Mats, his Pillow of Leather, imbrodered with white Beads and Pearl, attired with a Robe of Skins like an Irish Mantle: at his head and feet an handsome young woman; on each side of the room twenty others, with their necks and shoulders painted Red, and about their necks a great Chain of Beads; his principal men sitting before them in like manner. Yet notwithstanding this great State, (and great it was indeed for such petit Princes) he and the rest became so subject to the English, that in Smith's time they did not only pay their Tributes, or Contributions, but at his command would send their Slaves and Subjects to James Town, to receive correction for wrongs done to the Colony. And it is probable enough that those of New-England, being the greater and more powerful Plantation (as followed with the stronger zeal, and carried on by the united purses of a prevalent Faction) were of like influence also amongst the Natives, though I find it not expressed in so many particulars.

4. The Isles of BERMUDAZ, many in number (some say 400 at the least) are situate directly East from Virginia, from which they are distant 500 English miles; 300 of the same miles from the City of London. So called from John Bermudaz, a Spaniard, by whom first discovered. Called also the Summer-Islands, from the shipwrack of Sir George Summers upon that Coast; so much delighted with the sadfates of the misadventure, that he endeavoured what he could to settle a Plantation in it.

That of more fame and greatness than all the rest, to which the name is now most properly ascribed, is situate in the Latitude of 32 and 30 minutes. Well stored, when first discovered, with plenty of Hogs, divers fruits, Mulberries, Palmettes, Cedars: as also of Silk-worms, Pearls and Amber, and such rich Commodities: of Fowl so infinite an abundance, that our men took a thousand of one sort, as big as a Pigeon, within two or three hours. The Aire heereof very found and healthy, found by experience (the best argument in such a point) to be agreeable to the body of an English man; yet terribly exposed to Tempests of Rain, Thunder, and Lightning. For which, and for the many shipwacks happening on the Coasts thereof, and want of other Inhabitants to be said to own it, the Mariners have pleased to call it the Island of Devils. The soyl affirmed to be as fertile as any; well watered, plentiful in Maize, of which they have two Harvests yearly; that which is sowed in March, being cut in July; and that which is sowed in August, being mowed in December. No venomous Creature to be found in all the Island, or will live, brought hither. And besides these Commodities, of so safe a being, so fenced about with Rocks and Isles, that without knowledge of the passages, a Boat of ten Tuns cannot be brought into the Haven; yet with such knowledge, there is entrance for the greatest ships. The English have since added to these strengths of nature, such additional helps, by Block-houses, Forts and Bulwarks in convenient places, as may give it the title of Impregnable.

It was first discovered (but rather accidentally than upon design) by John Bermudaz, a Spaniard, about the year 1522. and thereupon a Proposition made in the Council of Spain, for settling a Plantation in it; as a place not to be avoided by the Spanish Fleets, in their return from the Bay of Mexico, by the Streits of Bahama. Neglected notwithstanding, till the like accidental coming of Sir George Summers, sent to Virginia with some Companies of English by the Lord De la Ware, An. 1609. Who being shipwracked on this Coast, had the opportunity to survey the Island; which he so liked, that he endeavoured a Plantation in it, at his coming home, An. 1612. the first Colony was sent over under Richard More, who in three years erected eight, or nine Forts in convenient places, which he planted with Ordinance. An. 1616. a new supply is sent over under Captain Daniel Tucker, who applied themselves to sowing Corn, setting of Trees brought thither from other parts of America, and planting that gainful Weed Tobacco. An. 1619. the business is taken more to heart, and made a matter of the Publick, many great Lords and men of Honour being interested in it: Captain Butler sent thither with 500 men, the Isle divided into Tribes, or Cantreds, to each Tribe a Burrough; this whole reduced to a settled Government both in Church and State, according to the Law of England. After this, all things so succeeded, that in the year 1623. here were said to be three thousand English, ten Forts, and in those Forts fifty pieces of Ordinance; their numbers since increasing daily, both by Children born within the Island, and supplies from England.

OF FLORIDA.

FLORIDA is bounded on the North-east, with Virginia; on the East, with Mare del Nourt; on the South, and some part of the West, with the Gulf of Mexico; on the rest of the West, with part of New Galicia, and some Countries hitherto not discovered. Extended from the River of Palmis in the 25. degree of Latitude, to Rio de Secco in the 34. which evidently speaketh it for a Country of large dimensions.

It was first discovered by the English under the conduct of Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1497. afterwards better searched into by John de Ponce, a Spaniard, who took possession of it in the name of that King, Anno 1527. and by him called Florida, either because he landed there upon Palm Sunday, which the Spaniards call Pascua di Flores, or Pascha Florida; or else quia Florida erat Regio, by reason of that fresh verdure and flourishing estate in which he found it. But by the Natives it is said to be called Jaguasfa.

This Country lying Parallel to Castile in Spain, is said to be of the same temper both for Air and Soil, but that it is abundantly more fruitful: the heart of the ground not being here worn out by continual Tillage, as perhaps it may be in the other. For here they have great abundance of Maize (the natural Bread-Corn of the Country) which they sowe twice a year, viz. March and June, and reap in the third month after, laying it in some publick Barns, and thence distribute it to the necessities of particular persons. Well stored with several sorts of Fruit, as Mulberries, Cherries, Chesnuts, Grapes and Plums of both excellent taste and colour: Beasts wild and tame, of all kinds which these Countries yield; and of like sorts of Fowl. The Woods and Forests full of the largest Oaks, and the softest Cedars; some Cypress Trees, and Bays, of a large proportion: with great plenty of that Wood which the Inhabitants call Pavane, and the French name Sassafras, the bark whereof is Medicinal against some diseases; and another Tree which we call Esquine, affirmed to be a Sovereign and present remedy for the French Disease. It is also said to be enriched with some Mines of Gold and Silver; neglected by the Natives, till the coming of the Spaniards and French, put a price upon them: and to have in it Emeralds of great worth and beauty, with many Targuifes and Pearls. Others report that all the Gold and Silver which they have amongst them, came from some ships which had been wracked upon those Coasts: contrary whereunto it is said by the Natives, that in the Hills which they call Apalatei, there are found great Veins of a reddish Metal, which the French concluded to be Gold, though they wanted time and opportunity to search into them.

The people are of an Olive colour, great stature, and well proportioned; naked, except their Privities, which they hide with the skins of Stags: their arms and knees stained with divers paintings, not to be washed off; their hair black, and hanging down as low as their thighs. Cunning they be, and excellent in the Arts of dissimulation. So stomachful, that they do naturally love War and Revenge, in so much that they are continually in War with one or other. They are crafty also and very intelligent, as appeareth by the answer they gave to Ferdinando Soto, a Spaniard, who was here amongst them, An. 1594. For when he went to persuade the people that he was the Son of God, and came to teach them the Law: Not so, replied a Floridan, for God never bad thee to kill and slay, and work all kind of mischief against us. The Women when their Husbands are dead, use to cut off their hair close to their ears, and throw it on his Sepulchre, and cannot marry again, till their hair be grown long enough to cover their shoulders. Hermophredites are here also in great plenty, whom they use as beasts to carry their luggage, and put them to all kind of drudgery. They have all a gross belief of the Souls immortality, but are otherwise Idolaters.

Mountains before mentioned, supposed by the inhabitants to be rich in Mines of Gold. Rivers of most note. 1. Rio Secco, 2. Rio Grande, 3. Serravahi, the two first named so by the Spaniards, and the last by the Natives. 4. Garunna, 5. Ligeis, 6. Axona, 7. Seguana, and 8. Charente, so called by the French, according to the names of the best Rivers in France; both French and Spaniards having severally and successively the possession of it. Here are also 9. Rio de Flores, or the River of Flowers; 10. Rio de Nieves, or the River of Snow; and 11. Rio de Spirito Santo, or the River of the Holy Ghost; all of them falling into the Bay of Mexico. A particular description of these Rivers, their rise, course and greatness, I find not in any of my Authors. Only Mercator telleth us of a twelfth River, called Porte Riale, reckoned the chiefest of this Country, the mouth whereof is three miles broad; where it openeth into the Sea betwixt two Promontories, the one towards the West, and the other pointing to the North. Some of these Rivers are affirmed to be haunted with Crocodiles, a Creature dangerous alike both by Land and Water.

The Country not so well discovered and planted hitherto, as to be divided into Provinces, is commonly distributed into several Tribes, as were all Nations of the World at their first Discovery. The principal of these they reckon the Quereues, Marianes, Canagadi, Camoni, Avavares, and Malicones, the Susilas, Quitones, and other names not usual unto us of Europe; though these more passable than many which have gone before: mollified perhaps by the French, and Spaniards, and not presented to us in their natural roughness; all governed by their Paracossi or several Chiefs, and those at deadly Feuds, and continual Wars with one another. Some have adventured on the names of particular Provinces, as

The Lucios. of delicate Springs. Others there are to the number of 24, or thereabouts, whose names occur in many of our larger Maps: but being we find nothing of them but their very names, I shall not trouble myself with the Nomenclature.

Of all in general it is said that they obeyed their King so strictly (for a King they had) that if he commanded them to leap down from a high rock, they performed the same; though he gave no reason but his Will. The Women of so perfect beauty, that many of the bordering Nations forsook their own Countries to enjoy their Loves: their shape and beauty the more discernable, in regard not suffered to wear any thing till their purgations: nor alter that, but nets of Cotton filled with Leaves of Herbs. But now and long since, there are neither men nor women to be found in any of them: the people being long since wasted by the Spaniards in the Mines of Cuba and Hispaniola; or consumed by Famine and Diseases, or otherwise made away in Prisons, and by several torments, to the number of a Million and 200000, as some have told us. And so we pass unto the other side of those Northern Countries, and opposite to Nova Francia, Virginia, and the main Land of Florida, that when we fall into the Countries now possessed by the Spaniards, we may not wander out of them till this work be finished, except it be to take a progress into some of the Islands, which cannot otherwise be visited but by such a Start.

CALIFORNIA.

SCAPE CALIFORNIA in the large and general acception of it, containeth all those Provinces of Mexicana, which lie on the West side of that Northern Peninsula, beyond Nova Galicia, and New Spain: though in the stricter, limited to that Province only which lieth on the other side of a long and spacious Gulf, called Mer Vermiglio, and from hence the Bay of California. But taking it in the largest sense, it hath on the West New Spain & New Galicia, and so unto those undiscovered parts which lie furthest North, to the Straits of Anian. So witnesseth John de Laet, l. 6. c. 11. CALIFORNIA communiter dicitur quicquid terrarum Nova Hispania atque Gallicia ad Occidentem obijcitur, ad extremos America Septentrionalis terminos, & Fretum quod vulgo Anian vocant. Limited in the stricter sense and acception of it, to an Island (as it is now generally conceived to be) extended in a full length from North to South, on the West hereof. So that for our more regular proceeding in the Chorographie and Story of it, we must divide it into the Continent, and the Island; the Continent subdivided into the two large Provinces of 1 Quivira, and 2 Cibola; the Island into 3 California specially so called, and 4 Nova Albion.

And first, the Continent of this part which we call California, hath on the East some parts of Nova Galicia; and besides that, those vast and undiscovered Countries, which lie on the West side of Canada and Virginia, on the opposite shore: bounded on the North with the unknown parts of this Mexicana; on the North-west, with the Straits of Anian, if such Straits there be; on the West with the Sea interposing betwixt it and the Island, called Mer Vermiglio; and on the South and South-west, with the rest of Nova Galicia, from which parted by a great River called Rio del Nort. A River which rising in the 40 degree of Northern Latitude, first parteth Tigues a Province of Quivira, from that of New Mexico, one of the Provinces of Nova Galicia; and after a long course fallen into the Sea, called Mer Vermiglio, above Cinola, another of the Provinces of that Division. Divided as before was said, into the two great Provinces of 1 Quivira, and 2 Cibola.

1 QUIVIRA, taking up the most Northern parts of this side of America, is said to be very plain and level; of few trees, not many houses, nor much stored of people; quite destitute of fruits and Corn, and yielding nothing for mans life but the flesh of Beasts, which they eat raw, and swallow down in great bits without any chewing. The men apparelled in Bulls skins from the head to the feet; the women, though in a cold Country, with no other garment than their hair, which they wear so long, that it serveth them in stead of a Veil to hide their nakedness. They live in Hordes and Companies, like the Hoards of the Tartars, not having any certain dwellings (except some chief men) but remove from one place to another, like the ancient Nomades. Near Neighbours unto Tartary, from whence (not being much distant from it) it is supposed that the Inhabitants first came, and from hence by degrees peopled all America.

The Country being full of Herbage, breeds great store of Cattel, differing not much in bigness from those of Europe, but that they have an high bunch betwixt their shoulders; bristled upon the back like Bores, with somewhat which resembleth the mane in Horses, and the beard in Goats; their legs short, and clad with fetlocks, their horns short, but sharp; the whole Beast of an aspect so horrid, that an Horse will not venture near them, till well acquainted. Yet in these Beasts lie all their riches, these being to this people, as we say with us of our Ale to Drunkards, meat, drink, and cloth, and more too. For the Hides yield them Houses, or at least the covering of them; their bones, bodkins; their hair, thread; their sinews, ropes; their horns, maws, and bladders, vessels; their dung, fire; their Calves skins budgers to draw and keep water; their blood, drink; and their flesh, meat. There is thought to be some traffique from China, or Cathay, hither: for when Vasques de Coronado conquered it, he saw in the further Sea certain ships, not of common making, which seemed to be well laden, and did bear in their prows the figure of Pelicans; which could not be conjectured to come from any Country but one of these two. I know, some place this Country more within the Land; and others are so far from letting it look towards any part of the Sea, that they have laid it close unto the back of Virginia. For my part, I have laid it along the Coasts, upon good authority; though I deny not but that some parts hereof may be more remote. Or else to reconcile the difference, it may thus be ended; that the maritime parts being known by other names, the Inlands might retain more specially the name of Quivira, as we have seen in many other Countries before described.

And this I am the rather inclined to think, because I find mention of three Provinces on the North of Cibola, but in the way unto Quivira; the one called Seio, the other called Cenic, and the third Tigues, which I look upon as the maritime parts of the same one Country, but better peopled and frequented than the Inlands are, because lying in the way of traffique. The principal Towns of which Provinces, 1 Acu, or Acuco, a small Town, but situate in a strong and defensible place, about which groweth some store of Cotton, which from the place the Natives call by the name of Aenco. 2 Tigues, on the banks of a River so called; inhabited by a stout and courageous people, who being resolved not to fall alive into the hands of the Spaniards, when besieged by Vasques de Coronado, after they had held out

Nova Albion. It is also told us of this people, that each family is ordered by the Father of it, without other government: yet so well managed, that they allowed but one wife to a man, and punished Adultery with death; the Maids not suffered to converse, or talk with men before their marriage, but to abide at home and work; the Widows not to marry again, till they had mourned at least half a year for the death of their husbands. Matters more favouring an Utopian Common-wealth, than a Californian.

Places of moit observation in it, 1 The Capes of S. Clara, and S. Lucas; the first on the South-east point of the Island towards New Galicia; the other on the South-west towards Asia. 2 S. Croesus (Sinus S. Crucis) a capacious and convenient Haven near the Cape of S. Clara; so called because discovered upon Holy Rood day. 3 Cabo di las Plaias, more within the Bay; so named, because the shore shewed in little Hillocks, without grafs or shrubs, the Spanish word signifying as much. 4 Cabo Boxo, towards the bottom of the Gulf, (from whence the Land on the other side may be easily seen) in the Latitude of 29. 5 S. Andrews, a convenient Haven, and not far off an Island of the same name, with some Cottages in it. 6 S. Thome, an Island of 25 leagues in compass, at the mouth of the Gulf; rising towards the South in an high Mountain, under which a convenient Road for shipping, the Sea being thereabouts 25 fathoms. Then on the other side towards the Sea, we have 7 S. Abad, a convenient Haven, surrounded with a Country which seemed rich and pleasant. 8 Cape Trinidad, a Promontory well known to Sea men. 9 Cape de Cedro, so called from the Cedars growing near it, in the Latitude of 28 and 15 minutes; with an Island not far off, of the same name also. 10 Cape Enganno, in the Latitude of 31. 11 Puebla de las Canoas, so named from the multitude of Boats (by themselves called Canoes) which the people used, four degrees more Northward than that Cape. And 12 Cabo de Galera, so named from the resemblance which it had to an Hat, in the Latitude of 36. But these two placed by John de Laet within the Country of Seyo, one of the Provinces of Quivira. Understand here, that these are only the names of places, not of Towns, or Villages, (for whether there be any such, I am yet unsatisfied;) and that there are many other Promontories, Bays, Rivers and Islands on both sides of this Region, which I find no names for.

The first discovery of this Country we owe to Ferdinando Cortez (of whom more hereafter) who in the year 1534. furnished out two ships from the Haven of S. Jago in the Western shores of Hispania Nova, to search these Seas: who making some small progress in it, encouraged him the next year to pursue it in person; and passing up the Gulf as high as to the River of S. Peter and Paul, (so called, because discovered on the 29 of June, the Annual Feast of those Apostles) for want of victuals and other necessary provisions, returned back again. The business having slept a while, was in the year 1539 awakened by Francisco de Ulloa, one that had accompanied Cortez the time before: who did not only search to the bottom of the Gulf, but having thoroughly canvassed all the Eastern shores, he turned his course, and made as fortunate a Discovery also of the Western Coasts. Landing, he took possession of the Country with the wonted Ceremonies, for the King of Spain; and in the place set up a Cross to serve as a remembrance of his being there. After him followed Ferdinando the Alarcon, who discovered many leagues up the course of the supposed River of Buena Guis; where Niguacatus, one of the Chiefs of their Clans, or Tribes, did submit unto him: advancing so far towards the North, that at the last he heard news of Cibola; but unprovided at that time for a journey thither. And on the other side, Rodrico Cabrillo, in the year 1642. coasting along the Western shores of this Country, discovered two small Islands beyond Cape Galera; the one of which he called S. Luke, and the other the Island of Possession: and beyond them a fair Haven, which he called Sardinia. But yet not finding what they looked for, which was Gold and Silver; and hungry honour yielding but a poor subsistence: the further search of these Countries was quite laid aside; almost as little known now, as before Columbus first set sail upon New Discoveries.

4 NOVA ALBION formerly conceived to be a part of the Continent, hath of late times been found to have taken up but some part of this Island; lying about the 38 degree of Latitude, and so Northwards as far as to Cape Blanco, as they call it now. Discovered by Sir Francis Drake in his Circumnavigation of the World, Anno 1577. and by him named Nova Albion, in honour of England, his own Country, which was once called Albion.

The Country abundantly replenished with Herds of Deer, grazing upon the Hills by thousands: as also with a kind of Conies, in their feet somewhat like a Wunt, and on each side a Sack where they keep such victuals as they cannot eat. The flesh of these Conies serves the people for food; and of their skins the Kings or Chiefs of their several Tribes, make their Royal Robes. The men quite naked, the women with a piece of Mar in stead of an Apron, chaste, and obedient to their husbands. Their houses made of Turf and Oiler, so wrought together, as serves to keep them from the cold: in the midst whereof they have an Hearth where they make fire, about which they lie along upon Beds of Bulrushes. What Towns they have, and whether they have any or not, and by what names called, if they have any, must be referred to a further Discovery: there being nothing to that purpose delivered hitherto. And yet not feared so far North, but that it may be capable of a further light, if any noble Undertakers would adventure on it.

The English were no sooner landed, but the Inhabitants presented themselves before the General, with presents of Feathers, and Kalls of Network made of Bull-rushes; which he received and required with great humanity. The news of their Arrival being carried further, one of their Kings thought fit to bestow a visit on them: A person of a goodly stature, attired in Cony-skins, with many tall men attending on him; one going before him with a Mace, at which hanged three Crowns, with as many Chains; the Chains of bone, but the Crowns of knit-work, made of Feathers, very ingeniously composed. After him him followed many of the common sort, every one having his face painted white, black, and some Nova Albion: other colours; and every one with some present or other in their hands, even the very boyes. Being brought into the Generals presence, the Mace-bearer made a long Speech, which might be well meant, though not understood: and that being ended, the King caused the Crown to be put upon the Generals head, and the three Chains about his neck; the Common-people offering sacrifices about the fields, in great solemnity. Not to be interdicted those superstitions, though the English (whom they took for Gods) seemed offended at them. Finally, after much kindness expressed on both sides, the General promising in the name of the Queen of England, to take them into his protection; he caused a Pillar to be erected in the place: on which he fastned the Arms of England, the Queens name, and his own; and so returned unto his ships. But the Country lying so far off, that no benefit could redound by it to the English Nation, but the honour of the first discovery; the name of Nova Albion by little and little was forgotten, and at last quite left out of the Maps, or Charts; only a Point or Promontory, by the name of Po de Francisco Draco, being left unto us to preserve his memory. And though we have caused the name of Nova Albion to be restored unto the Maps, as it was before, yet we must let the Reader know; that the name of New Albion hath been given lately with as much propriety, but more hopes of profit and advantage to that part of Virginia which lieth betwixt Mary-Land and New England, as before was noted.

Opposite to Cape Blanco, and the extrem North parts of America, the supposed Kingdom of ANIAN, from whence the Straits of Anian which are thought by some to part America from Asia, do derive their name, is conceived to lie. Supposed, and supposed only, for not certainly known: the very being of such a Kingdom, and such Straits, being much suspected.

NOVA GALLICIA.

NOVA GALLICIA is bounded on the East and South with Nova Hispania, or New Spain, on the West, with Mexvermiglio, better known heretofore by the names of the River Buena Guia, and the Gulf of California; the Countries beyond it on the North, not discovered hitherto. So called because of some resemblance which it was thought to have to Gallia, a Province of Spain, in Europe; the word Nova being added to it for distinctions sake.

It is situate between the 18th. and 28th. degree of the Northern Latitude, which measured from the Port of the Nativity, (by the Spaniards called Natividad, and contractedly Nvidad) where it confineth on New Spain, to the most Northern border of Cinaloa, makes 300 leagues: the breadth hereof, for so much as is possessed by the Spaniards, but an hundred only. But taking in New Biscay, and Nova Mexicana into the Account, the breadth will be greater than the length.

The Air hereof generally very temperate, but more inclined to heat than cold; many times subject unto Thunders and great storms of rain; but for the most part of so found a constitution, that the Inhabitants attain to a good old age; contagious diseases seldom known amongst them. The ground by consequence somewhat of the driest, if not moistened with the morning Dews, which fall very frequently, and whether by the temperature of the Air, or Soil, apt to produce a kind of Gnat (which the Latines call Cimices) affirmed to be as big as a Bean, which by their stings do very often plague the people, and raise blisters on their bodies as big as Walnuts.

The Country more Mountainous than plain, and in most parts sandy; Quarries of stone in many places, but little Marble, or any other stone of value. Good store of Mines of Brasse and Silver, few of Gold or Iron, and amongst all their Metals a great mixture of Lead. The soil so rich, that it yields 60 measures of Wheat for one; and for one of Maize, above two hundred: the Rivers plentiful of Fish, and the Woods of Beasts; great store of Bees without stings, which make their Honey in the Forests without other Hives. And as for Apples, Pears, Citrons, Figs, Malcotons, and other European Fruits, they thrive better here than they do in Spain, except the Cherry and the Olive: of which the last is most an end undermined by Emmets; and the first thrusts out such a harvest of Leaves (occasioned by the natural rankness of the ground) that they seldom come to their perfection.

The people wavering and inconstant, apt upon any discontent to forsake their houses, betake themselves unto the Woods, and many times to return to their ancient Barbarism. Crafty, and docile even in matters which concern Religion; but slothful and impatient of any labour, to which not to be hired but for very great wages. Much given to singing, dancing, and sometimes to drinking; and were it not that they loved their Liquor, few of them would betake themselves to the cares of Husbandry. Of stature reasonably tall; their Garments for the most part a shirt of Cotton, with a mantle over it, fastened with two Buckles about their shoulders. They dwell in Villages and Towns, according to the greatness of their several Tribes: those Tribes commanded by their Chiefs, who succeed hereditarily; but subject to the Judges and other Officers of the King of Spain. As for the Spaniards who here dwell, they betake themselves generally to merchandise, and the search of Metals; some few to Husbandry and grazing, but make not the best use which they might of the Country: for though here be great plenty both of Sugar-Canes and of Caccineels, yet they neglect to refine the one, and attend the ordering of the other; finding perhaps an easier, or a greater profit in the other Commodities.

The Mountain of most note in all this Country, is that betwixt Guadalajara and Zacatecas; a league in height, but of such a precipice withal, that no Horse nor Cattel can ascend it: their other Hills rocky, but clothed with Woods full of vast Pines, large Oaks, and great store of Wolves. The River of most name, is that called Baxania, which rising out of the Lake of Mechnacan in Nova Hispania, falls down a Cataract about four leagues from Guadalajara, of ten fathoms deep, and so tumbleth into Mare del Zur: in no place fordable, nor having any passage over it but on Reeds and Raffs, on which the passenger sitteth with his Commodities, his Horse swimming by; not safe at any time, and at most time dangerous. Some Lakes here be of 20, some of 12 leagues compass; environed with rich Pastures on every side. Those of less note shall be remembered in their proper places.

It comprehends the Provinces of 1 Cinaloa, 2 Conliacan, 3 Xalisco, and 4 Guadalajara; on the Western shores: 5 Zacatecas, 6 New Biscay, 7 Nova Mexicana, more within the Land. Of all these somewhat shall be said, though of each but little.

1 CINALOA, is the most Northern Province of New Gallicia, bounded upon the West with the supposed River of Buena Guia, and some part of the Bay of California; on the East, with a long chain of Mountains, called the Hills of Tepefuan; on the North, with the South parts of Cibola; on the South, with Conliacan.

The air for the most part clear and healthy, the soil far and fruitful, productive of Maize, Pulse, a sort of long Pease which the Latines call Phasoli, but we have no proper English name for; of which abundantly plentiful. Great store of Cotton-wool, wherewith both Sexes are apparelled. Well watered with with the Rivers, 1 Petalan, 2 Tamochala, 3 Paschua, 4 Taquim; of no long course, all of them rising from the Hills of Tepefuan, and those but 36 leagues distant from the Sea-shores. By reason of these Rivers here are very rich Pastures, which breed great store of Kine, Oxen, and other Cattel.

The people are generally tall, higher than the Spaniards by a hand breadth, warlike and strong, not conquered by the Spaniards without great difficulty; their Arms a Bow and poisoned Arrows, with great mastie Clubs. Their Garments for the most part of Cotton-wool; their hair nourished to a great length, which the men tie up in a knot, but the Women suffer to hang down to the full length of it. Both Sexes at the first coming of the Spaniards thither, without clothes at all, but to hide their shame; most miserably poor, worshippers of the Sun, and not a few Cannibals amongst them.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 S. Philip and Jacob, situate on the bank of a River, about 42 leagues from the Town of Conliacan, but of no great note. 2 S. Johns de Cinaloa, a Colony of the Spaniards planted here long since; and re-inforced by a supply brought thither in the year 1554. by Francisco de Tharras; scarce able to defend themselves from the old Inhabitants, who ever and anon disturb them with a fresh alarm. Besides these here are only some scattered Villages, and those not many: the Spaniards finding only 25 old Forts in all the Country, when they first made themselves Masters of it, under the Conduct of Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1542. People every where submitting without any resistance, or if they gathered to an head, soon dispersed again. For what could naked men do against an Army?

2 CONLIACAN, or QULUCAN, lieth on the South of Cinaloa, coasting along the Bay of California, which it hath on the West, and part of New Biscay, on the East. The Country well provided of fruits, inferior unto none for all sorts of provisions; and not without some Mines of Silver found out by the Spaniards. The chief Rivers of it, 1 Rio de Mucheras, or the River of Women, in the North part of the Province; so called because the Spaniards found there more women than men, occasioning the opinion that it was inhabited by Amazons, 2 Rio de Sal, a goodly River, both sides whereof are very well peopled. 3 Piafla, more towards Xalisco.

The people not much different from the rest of Gallicia, save that their Women were more handsome, both for dress and personage: all clothed in Garments of Cotton-wool, when first known to the Spaniards; and yet the men not free from the sin of Sodom. Their houses neatly thatched with straw; and over the Lintels of the Doors some Paintings, as shameless as the very fowlest of Aretines Postures. Ignorant of Gold, which they had no Mines of; but of late times acquainted, to their cost, with Silver; which they are compelled to dig, and refine for the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Piafla, on the River so called about a days journey from the Sea; well built, and artificially contrived in respect of others; never recovered of that blow which it had from the Spaniards, who in the Conquest of this Country waited all before them. 2 Quinola, near Rio de Mucheras. 3 Quintrabarris, an old Town, but new named by the Spaniards, because it consisted of four parts. 4 El Leon, an old Burrough which from a Lyon there found, had this new name also. 5 Conliacan, on a River so named, once the chief of this Province. 4 S. Michael, on the River of Women, built by Nonnez de Guzman, in the latitude of 15, but afterwards deserted, or removed rather to a fitter place; and now fixed in the Valley of Harrova, two leagues from the Sea, in a flourishing and wealthy soil both of Corn and Pasture. The whole Country conquered by the Spaniards, Anno 1531. under Nonnez de Guzman, most barbarously burning down the Towns, and destroying the people; as if they came not to subdue, but root out the Nation.

3 XALISCO, or GALESCO, as some Writers call it, hath on the North, Conliacan; on the South, New Spain; on the East, the Province of Guadalajara; on the West, the large Bay of California. So called from Xalisco the chief Town of it, when subdued by the Spaniards.

The soil hereof very fit for Maize, which it yields good store of, but not often herbage good for Cattel, which is reckoned for their greatest want. The North parts called Chiametla, of the two most fruitful, and better peopled; having in it store of Wax and Honey, with some Mines of Silver. The people formerly Man-eaters, and much given to quarrel; from which Reformed since their Conversion to the Gospel. Tenacious still of one of their ancient Customs, which is, to carry the smallest burden upon their shoulders, and not under their arms; which to do they think very much unbecoming.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1 S. Sebastian, 2 Rio de Spiritu Sancto, and 3 the great and famous River of Barrania, spoken of before. Upon the banks of which are situate their most principal Towns, viz. 1 Xalisco, giving name to the whole Province, and to a large Promontory, called by the Spaniards Sierra de Xalisco, thrusting it self into the Bay of California, over against the Islands called the Three Maries; the City taken and destroyed by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1530. 2 Campostella, now the chief City of the Country, and a Bishops See; founded by the said Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1531. when he had fully conquered the Country: by whom peopled with Spaniards, and by him called Del Spiritu Sancto. But founded in a place, and so bad an air, destitute both of food for men, and grass for horses; as plainly shewed him to have better judgment in Soldierly than in Architectural. 3 Pariscation, a small Burrough on the Sea-side, and in the extremity of this Country towards Nova Hispania, near the Port of Natividad. 4 S. Sebastian in Chiametla, on the River so called, first built by Francisco de Tharras above mentioned; who having found hereabouts some rich Mines of Silver, brought thither in the year 1554. a new Spanish Colony; and building houses for his Miners in convenient places, occasioned the whole Tract to be called de Tharras.

4 GUADALAJARA hath on the West, Xalisco; on the East and South, some parts of Nova Hispania; on the North, the Province of Zacatecas: well watered with the River Barrania, which runneth neath through the midst thereof, some of his by-streams moistening the other parts. The Country very wealthy in Mines of Silver, plentiful of Maize, and fortunate in the production of Wheat and such other fruits, as were brought hither out of Europe. The Character of the people we have before, applied in general to all the Natives of New Gallia, but most peculiar unto these.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Guadalajara, so called with reference to a Town of that name in New Castile, and giving name unto the Province, situate on the banks of the River Barania, or some branch thereof, in a sweet air, and a most rich and pleasing soil; where founded by Nonnez de Guzman, Anno 1531. when he had perfected his Conquest: better advised in the choice of the place, than in that of Compostella before mentioned. A City of so good esteem, that it passeth for the Metropolis of all New Gallia; honoured with the Courts of Judicature, the residence of the Kings Treasurers, and a Bishops See, removed hither from Compostella, An. 1570. Beautified on this last occasion with a fair Cathedral, a Convent of Franciscans, and another of Augustine Friars. 2 Del Spiritu Santo, built by the said Nonnez in that part of this Country, which is called Tepique; but not else observable. 3 Santa Maria de los Lagos, built by the same Founder, 30 leagues on the East of Guadalajara; and the best defence of all this Province against the Chichimecas, a barbarous and untamed people on the North and East parts of this Country: who harbouring themselves in the thickest of the Woods, and some unknown Caves, do many times prey upon the Country; which they would utterly destroy, if not thus repressed.

5 ZACATECAS is bounded on the South, with Guadalajara; on the North, with New Biscay; on the West, with Culiacan, and some part of Xalisco; on the East, with Panuco, one of the Provinces of New Spain.

The Country of a different nature. In the West parts called properly Los Zacatecas, rich in Mines of Silver (no one Province more,) but destitute of Wheat, Maize, Water, and all other Provisions; as if it were designed for some wealthy Miser, who could live upon the sight of Treasure. The Eastern parts properly called Xalitpa, not so well furnished with Silver, but most abundantly provided with all sorts of fruits; their Woods replenished with Deer, their Fields with Corn, and every Tree giving entertainment to some Bird, or other: in a word, nothing wanting in it, either for necessity, or pleasure. Of the people, I find nothing singular, but that they are affirmed to be more industrious than the most of their Neighbours; whether by force, or nature, (the Spaniards compelling them to drudge in their Silver-mines) I determine not.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Los Zacatecas, neighbored by most wealthy Mines, 40 leagues on the North of Guadalajara; inhabited by about 500 Spaniards, who have here a Convent of Franciscans. 2 S. Martin, 27 leagues from Zacatecas, the Mines whereof were first opened by Francisco de Tharra, before mentioned; who with many slaves, and all things necessary for a War, was sent upon that errand by Lewis de Velasco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, An. 1554. The Town inhabited by a Colonie of 400 Spaniards, besides women and children. 3 S. Lukas, and 4 De Avinnon, built amongst Mines as wealthy as those before, by the same De Tharra: as also was 5 Erena, a small Town, but of the same estate for Silver; distant from Zacatecas 15 leagues towards the North-west. 6 Nombre di Dios, in the most Northern parts of this Country, 68 leagues from Guadalajara, the foundation of the same De Tharra. Who having conquered the Natives, and quieted them after some Rebellions by gentle usage, built this Town in a pleasant and fruitful soil: and having got the Government of the Countries which he had discovered, drew hither so many of the Spaniards and chief men of the Natives, by granting them the propriety of some Silver Mines, that it became the chief and best peopled Town of all this Province. 7 Durango, in the valley of Guadiana, about eight leagues distant from Nombre di Dios, peopled by a Colonie of Spaniards conducted thither by Alonso Pacheco, at the appointment of De Tharra, to whom the Spaniards are indebted for all this treasure. 8 Xeres de Frontera, first built for the repressing of some of the Salvages, who used to infest the borders towards Guadalajara, during the Regencie of the Marquess of Villa Manrique, who then commanded in New Spain.

As for OXITIPA, it belonged once unto the Province of Panuco, subdued by Lopez de Mendoza, employed therein by Nonnez de Guzman, An. 1529. at that time Governour of that Province. Disembred from it since the conquest of Zacatecas, and made a Member of the Presellure of New Gallia. The chief Town of it called S. Lewis, built in a pleasant Valley by the said Pacheco, and by him peopled with a Colonie of Spaniards: the Town not distant from Panuco above twenty leagues.

6 NOVA BISCALIA, or New Biscay, hath on the South, Los Zacatecas; on the West, Cinaloa; on the North, Nova Mexicana; the Countries towards the East not discovered hitherto. So called by Francisco de Tharra, by whom first subdued, from the near neighbourhood which it had unto Nova Gallia, of which since reckoned for a part.

The Country subject in the Winter to great Frosts and Snows; but notwithstanding well provided for all things necessary, and wonderfully enriched with Mines of Silver. They have also some of Lead, which serve very fitly for the melting and purifying of the other; used to this purpose not alone in these Mines of New Biscay, but in those also of New Spain. The people resolute and stout, not conquered at the first attempt, nor won so much by force, as by fair persuasions.

Places of most observation in it, 1 S. Barbara, and 2 S. Johns, about three leagues distant; built only for the benefit of the Mines adjoining. 3 Ende, the furthest Town which the Spaniards have towards the North; of whom a Colonie was there planted (by reason of the adjoining Mines) by Roderico del Rio, who did also fortifie it by the direction of De Tharra, under whom a Colonel. Distant from S. Barbara, and S. John about twenty leagues, and an hundred and twenty leagues from Los Zacatecas. More North by seventy leagues at least, and within this Region, but not within the power of the Spaniards, are said to be those four great Towns which the Spaniards call Las Quatro Ciudades; but I have nothing of them certain.

Nova Mexicana.

This Country first subdued by Francisco de Tharra, who after he had built Durango in the North parts of Los Zacatecas, and assured that Province, advanced with a Troop of 130 horse for the Discovery and Conquest of his Northern Neighbours. Encountered at the first more with hunger and thirst, than with any opposition of the Inhabitants; inasmuch that they were fain to eat their Horses: and afterwards by the Rebellion of the Natives, who killed the greatest part of such Horses as were left uneaten. But not discouraged herewith, nor with the many difficulties which he found in his way, being compelled to hew his passage thorow the Woods by the swords of his Souldiers, he prevailed at last; and having settled it in peace, returned by the way of Cinaloa, which he also Conquered; and planted there a Colony in the Town of S. Johns, as was said before.

7. NOVA MEXICANA, is bounded on the South, with New Biscay; on the West, with Quivira; the Countreys on the North, and East, not discovered hitherto; though some extend it Eastwards as far as Florida. Extended 250 Leagues from the Town and Mines of S. Barbara, and how much beyond that none can tell; the Relations of this Country being so uncertain, and indeed incredulous, that I dare say nothing positively of the Soil or People, but much less of the Towns and Cities which are said to be in it. So named by Antonio de Espejo, a Citizen of Mexico in New Spain, by whom discovered and subdued.

For first, they tell us of the People, that they are of great stature (and that like enough) but not so probable, that they have the Art of dressing Chamois and other Leather, as well as the best Leather-Dresser in all Flanders: or that they have Shoes and Boots so well sewed and soled, that no Sboe-maker in all S. Martins could do it better. Then for their Towns, that they are very fair and goodly, the houses well built of Lime and Stone, some of them four Stories, and in most of them Staves for the Winter Season. The Streets even, and ordered in an excellent manner. Particularly they tell us of a Town called 1 Chia, one of the five chief Towns of the Province of Cuame, which is said to contain eight Market-places, and all the houses to be plaistered and painted in most curious manner. 2 Of Aconia, that it is situate on the top of a Rock, a great Town, yet no way unto it but by Ladders; and in one place a pair of stairs but exceeding narrow, hewn out of the Rock; exceedingly well fortified by Nature (they say true in that, if any things were true which they tell us of it) and all their water kept in Cisterns (but no body can tell from whence they have it.) 3 Of Conibas, on a Lake so called, the City seven Leagues long, two broad; (a second Ninive) but the Houses scatteringly built amongst Hills and Gardens, which takes up a great deal of the room: Inhabited by a People of such strength and courage, that the Spaniards only faced it, and so went away. Much of this stuff I could afford you; but by this rate we may conjecture of the rest of the Feast.

The Country first discovered by Augustino Royaz, a Franciscan Friar, Anno. 1580. who out of Zeal to plant the Gospel in the North, accompanied with two other Friars of that Order, and eight Souldiers, undertook the Adventure. But one of the Monks being killed by the Salvages, the Souldiers played the Poltrons, and gave over the Action. On their return, Beltram, a Friar of the same Order (from whose mouth we must have the former Fictions) desirous to preserve the lives of his Fellows which staid behinde, encouraged one Antonio de Espejo a Native of Corduba, but a Citizen of Mexico, to engage in such an holy Cause: who raising a Band of 150 horse, accompanied with many Slaves, and Beasts of Carriage, undertook the business. I omit the many Nations of the Conchi, Pasnegates, Tobosi, Pakarabyes, Tarrabumares, Tepoanes, and many other as hard names, which he passed thorow in his way. But coming at the last to a great River which he called Del Norte there he made a stand; caused the Country on both sides of it to be called Nova Mexicana, and a City to be built which he called New Mexico, situate in the 37th degree of Northern Latitude, and distant from old Mexico five hundred Leagues: the name since changed to that of S. Foye, but still the Metropolis of that Province, the Residence of the Governour, and a pretty Garrison consisting of two hundred and fifty Spaniards. Some other Towns he found at his coming hither, viz. 2 Sucorro, so called by the Spaniards because of that succour and relief they found there for their half-starved Bodies. 3 Seneca, 4 Pilabo, and 5 Sevilleta, old Towns, but new Christianized by the Spaniards, when the Inhabitants thereof did embrace the Gospel, each of them beautified with a Church. 6 S. Johns, built afterwards in the year 1599. by John de Onate, who with an Army of five thousand followed the same way which Espejo went; and having got a great deal of Treasure, laid it up in this place, that it might be no incumbrance to him in his Advance. This is the most I dare relye on for this Country: And this hath no such Wonders in it, but what an ealie Faith may give credit to: though I had rather believe the Friers whole Relations, than go thither to disprove any part thereof.

out of other Countreys, to recover their health. Well stored with Rivers, some Lakes, innumerable Springs of running water, and here and there some hot Bathes issuing from the Rocks. The soyl so plentifully productive of all sorts of Grain (even to admiration) that in some parts hereof four measures of Seed have brought forth 600 measures of the same Grain, in the following Harvest. Well wooded, and by reason of its Springs and Rivers, full of excellent Pastures; and yet not yielding unto any part of all by reason of its Medicinal Herbs, and Plants, of very soveraign nature for the good of Mankind. It affordeth also store of Amber, Mulberry Trees, Silk, Wax, Honey, and such other things, as chiefly serve for Pomp and Pleasure.

The People tall of stature, but strong and active: of a good wit, and skilled in many excellent Manufactures. They speak four languages of their own; but that most generally used, is by the Spaniards called the Tarascan tongue; which though it be an elegant and copious language, yet most of them speak the Spanish also. More pliant to the manners and apparel of that Nation, than the rest of New Spain (the Mexicans excepted only) and so inclinable to the Gospel, that they are almost all gained from their old Idolatry. Inasmuch that the whole Countrey being divided into 50 Parishes, every Parish hath its several Priests and inferior Ministers, who in the language of the place do instruct the people, in which they preach to them, and hear their Confessions: besides many Convents of Dominicans, and Augustine Friars.

It containeth in it upwards of 150 Towns, or Burroughs, besides scattering Villages; 90 of which have Free Schools in them, and almost every one a Spittle for relief of the sick. The principal thereof, 1 Zimzanza, the seat of the old Kings of Mechuacan; in the first times of Christianity in this Countrey, made a Bishops See, till removed to Pascuar. The first Bishop, Vasquez de Quiroga. 2 Pascuar, of no great note at present, but that the Bishops See was removed thither, because nearer to Mexico; from which distant 47 leagues. 3 Valladolid, now the chief City of this Province, and the Bishops See, removed hither from Pascuar, and here finally settled in a fair Cathedral, An. 1544. Situate near a large Lake (said to be bigger than that of Mexico) which doth not only afford the City great store of Fish, but yieldeth them the opportunity of several pleasures which they take in Boats upon the water. The Lake and City by the Natives called Guayangareo. 4 S. Michael, in the way from Mexico (from which distant about 40 leagues) to the silver Mines of Zacatecas. First built by Louis de Velasco, then Vice-Roy of Mexico, to defend the people of this Province from the Chichimecas; a barbarous, and hitherto an unconquered people, who terribly molest the Nations upon whom they border. 5 S. Philips, built at the same time by the said Velasco. 6 Concepcion de Sayla, seventeen leagues from Valladolid; 35 from Mexico; of the foundation of Martin Enriquez, the Vice-roy, An. 1570. to be a Stage for travellers, in their journeys Northwards. 7 Guaxanato, bordering on Pannco, and not far from S. Jago de Los Valles, rich in Mines of Silver. Then on the Sea, we have 8 Acatlan, on the borders of New Galicia, two miles from the Ocean; a Town of not above 30 houses, with a little Church; but neighboured by a large and safe Road for Shipping (by the Spaniards called Malacca) which makes it seldom without the company of Saylers. 9 Natividad, (or Portus Nativitatis) a noted and convenient Haven, from whence they commonly set sail to the Philippine Islands; pillaged and burnt by Captain Cavendish in his Circumnavigation of the World. 10 S. Jago de Buena Esperanza, a little on the South of Natividad; the shores whereof are said to be full of Pearls. 11 Columbia, ten leagues from the Sea, but more South than the other, built in the year 1522. by Gonzalvo de Sandoval. 12 Zacatula, by the Spaniards called Concepcion, situate on the Banks of a large (but nameless) River; which rising about the City of Tlascala, passeth by this Town, and thence with two open mouths runneth into the Sea.

This Province, at the coming of the Spaniards hither, was a distinct Kingdom of it self, not subject nor subordinate to the Kings of Mexico, as were most of the Princes of these parts: the Frontiers of the Kingdom fenced with stakes of wood, like a Palizado, to hinder any sudden incursion of the Mexican Forces. The last King called Tangayuan Bimbicha, submitted of his own accord to Cortez, An. 1522. and willingly offered himself to Baptism. But the Spaniards were not pleased with either, because deprived thereby of the spoil of the Country. But at last Nonnez de Guzman, then President of the Courts of Justice in Mexico, picked a quarrel with him, accused him falsely (as is said by the very Spaniards) of some practices against his King; burnt him alive with most barbarous and unheard of cruelty, and so confiscated his Estate.

3. MEXICANA, is bounded on the East, with the Gulf of New Spain; on the West, with Mechuacan; on the North, with Pannco; and some part of Nova Galicia; on the South, with Tlascala, and part of the Southern Sea. So called from Mexico, the chief City not of this Province only, but of all America.

It is in breadth from North to South, measuring by the Bay of Mexico, 130 leagues; thence growing narrower in the midland parts hardly above sixty; and on the shores of Mare del Zuv, not above seventeen. The length hereof extendeth from one Sea to the other, that is to say, from the point of Libos in the Province of Papanla, on the Gulf of Mexico to the Haven of Acapulco, on the Southern Ocean: but the determinate number of miles I do not where finde. But measuring it from 17 degrees and an half of Latitude, unto the 22d, and allowing something for the slope, we may conclude it to be much of the length, as it is breadth, that is to say, about 130 leagues.

The Countrey is inferior to Peru in the plenty and purity of Gold and Silver, but far exceeding it both in the Mechanical and Ingenious Arts, which are here professed, and in the abundance of Fruits and Cattel: of which last here is such store, that many a private man hath 40000 Kine and Oxen to himself. Fish is here also in great plenty; that only, which is drawn out of the Lake whereon Mexico standeth, being reported worth 30000 Crowns yearly, to the Kings Exchequer. The people for the most part witty and industrious, full of valour and courage; good Handycraftsmen, if they stoop so low as to Trade and Manufactures; rich Merchants, if they give themselves to more gainfull traffick; and hardy Souldiers, if trained up and employed in service. Their ancient Arms were Slings, and Arrows; since the coming of Mexicans, the Spaniards practised on the Harcubize. In a word, what was said before of New Spain in general, as to the soyl and people of it, is most applicable to this.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1 Los Topes, which parteth this Province from that of Tlascala. 2 Citula; and 3 Mila, both running Eastward towards the Gulf. 4 Papagayo, in the way from Mexico to Acapulco; with a fair bridge over it. 5 Las Balsas of aviolent course, and in bigness equal unto Tagus in Spain; passable onely by a bridge made of Rafts and Reeds, not very strongly joyned together. 6 The River of S. Francis, both large and swift, but in some parts fordable. Mountains of note I finde not any which require a more particular consideration; and so pass them over the more easily.

Towns of most note in it, 1 Mexico, the seat of an Archbishop, and of the Spanish Vice-Roy, who hath the power to make Laws and Ordinances, to give directions, and determine controversies; unless it be in such great causes which are thought fit to be referred to the Council of Spain. This City was first situate in the Lakes and Islands, like Venice; every where interlaced with the pleasant currents of fresh, and seawaters; and carrying a face of more civil government than any of America; though nothing, if compared with Europe. But the Town being destroyed by Cortez, it was built afterwards on the firm Land, on the Edge of the Lake, and bordering on a large and spacious Plain. The Plain on which it bordereth, is said to be 70 leagues in compass, environed with high Hills; on the tops whereof the snow lieth continually. In the middle of which Plain are two great Lakes, the least of them forty miles in circuit, the one salt, and the other fresh: each of them alternately ebbing and flowing up into the other. On the Banks of the salt Lake standeth the City of Mexico, with many other goodly Towns, and stately houses; on which Lake also, 50000 Wherries are continually plying. The Town in compass six miles, and containeth 6000 houses of Spaniards, and 60000 Indians. It is a by-word, that at Mexico there are four fair things, viz. The Women, the Apparel, the Horses, and the Streets. Here is also a Printing-house, an University, and a Mint; the Cathedral Church, ten Convents of Nuns, several houses of Jesuits, Dominicans, Franciscans, Augustinians, and other Religious Orders; some Colleges, many Spittles, and Hospitals, and other publick buildings of great state and beauty. By the Natives it was anciently called Temiztitan, the name of Mexico being given on a new occasion, of which more hereafter: most miserably endamaged by the breaking in of the waters, An. 1629. which swelled so high that they not only overwhelmed the meaner houses, but the Vice-Roy's Palace; drowned many thousands of the People, and destroyed the household-stuff of the rest. Occasioned by the avarice of the Kings Ministers, who had inverted the Money to their private use, which should have fortified the banks. But being a rich and wealthy City, it soon recovered of that blow, attaining in short time to such infinite riches, that generally the Merchants, Traders, and Artificers, do brave it in a greater state, and more splendid Equipage than any people under Heaven of the like condition. 2 Tezcuco, situate on the same Lake, but six leagues from Mexico; heretofore twice as big as Sevil: and for the beauty of the streets, and elegance of the houses, not inferior to any. Served with fresh water from the Hills, brought in Pipes and Conduits, though feared on the brink of a salt Lake. 3 Quilavaca, built wholly in the Lake-like Venice, and therefore by the Spaniards called Venezuela; a City of 2000 households: the way unto it over a Causeway made of slits; half a league long; and about twenty spans in breadth. 4 Uztacpalapa, half in the Lake, and half without, with many Ponds of fresh water, and a beautiful Fountain. A City of 10000 households, six leagues from Tezcuco, and two from Mexico. 5 Mexicaltzingo, a Burrough of 4000, and 6 Chyucan, one of 6000 Families: both upon the Lake: beautified in the times of their Paganism with many Temples, so gorgeously set out to the eye; that as far off they seemed of silver; most of them now converted into Monasteries, and Religious houses. 7 Chulula, the fairest of all the Lake, scarce excepting Mexico, with which it anciently contended both for state and bigness: said to contain 20000 Families, and to be beautified with so many Temples, that their Towers equalled the number of the dayes of the year. The people so addicted unto their Idolatries, and so barbarous in their bloody and beastly Sacrifices, that no fewer than 6000 Infants of both Sexes were yearly murdered on their Altars. 8 Mesitlan, seated on an high Hill, begirt about with most pleasant Groves, and shady Woods. A Town of about 30000 Inhabitants, the Villages about the Hill being reckoned in: situate 14 leagues, or two days journey from Mexico, in the way to the Province of Pannco; the high way on both sides set with fruitful Trees, to the great comfort and refreshment of the way-faring men. 9 Clantimoltepe, twenty leagues from Mesitlan, a Mannour to which 40000 of the Natives do owe suit, and service. 10 Antequepe, on the South of the City of Mexico, at the foot of the Mountain Propampetche; a Town belonging to the Marquess of Valla, and seated in the most delicious place of all New Spain. 11 Acachibca, on the North-East of Mexico, betwixt it and the Gulf, bordering on the Province of Papanla. 12 Acapulco, an Haven-town of the South-sea, situate on a safe and capacious Bay; at the entrance of it a league broad, and in the body of it full of convenient Stations and Docks for shipping: so that it is accounted the safest Haven of all those Seas. At the bottom of it towards the West, stands the Town and Castle, the Castle opportunely seated on a little fore-land, both to command the Town, and secure the Port; well walled and fortified with four very strong Bulwarks, on which are planted good store of Ordnance; the Garrison consisting ordinarily of 400 Souldiers: strengthened the rather in regard of the usual intercourse which is betwixt this Port and the Philippine Islands.

The Original Inhabitants of this Countrey (as far at least as their Records are able to reach) were the Chichimecas, now the most rude and barbarous Savages of all these parts; together with the Otomies, somewhat more civil than the rest, but yet rude enough. By these possessed till about the year 902. as it is conjectured from their Annals, when vanquished and dispeized by some new comers, whom they called by one name Nawalacos: issuing as it is conceived from those parts of Galicia Nova, which are now called Nova Mexicana, An. 720. or thereabouts; but lingering in their march, and waiting all the Countreys as they lay before them. Of these there were seven Tribes in all, i. e. the Sachimilci, the Chalce, the Tepaneca, the Culua, the Tlaximilci, the Tlascalteca; all of them settled in these parts, and the five first about the Lake, before the coming in of the 7th Tribe, which was that of the Mexicans, so called from Mexi their chief Caprain; who much delighted with the situation and conveniences of Temistitan then a ruined Town, caused it to be rebuilt and beautified, by the name of Mexico. This town from that time forwards was reputed the head-City of their Common-wealth; the six Tribes governing in common, or the Chiefs rather of those Tribes in the names of the whole, after an Aristocratical manner. But weary at the last of this equal power, which the prevalency of some Tribes had made very unequal; the Mexicans, one of the weakest of the Tribes, oppressed by the rest, resolved to separate themselves, and to commit the ordering of their affairs to a King of their own. At first elected by themselves, but afterwards when they had conquered most of the other Tribes, the choice intrusted unto six, one for every Tribe, (the Tlascalteca which was the seventh of their Tribes, and the Founders of Tlascala, governing themselves long before, as a State apart;) who in their choice had an especial eye on those which were strong and active, and fit for military employments; the people holding it a commendable meritorious act to kill their Kings, if once they were reputed Cowards. The Polity and Institutes of this Mexican Kingdom, I forbear to write of, further than as they lie before me in the way of their Story: digested by the government and succession of their several Kings, whose names and actions do occur in the following Catalogue of

- | | |
|---------|---|
| A. Ch. | A. Ch. |
| 1322 1 | Acampitzli, Nephew to the King of Comilacan , but of the Mexican blood by the Fathers side, elected for the first King; who joyned Comilacan and Tongancan unto his Estate, and settled that Kingdom at his death in the way of Election. |
| 1373 2 | Vitzavitzli, Son of Acampitzli , subdued the tribe of the Sachimilchi , and others of the neighbouring Nations. |
| 1394 3 | Huizilbihuel son of Vitzavitzli , conquered the Tribes of the Chalce and Culua , with many other Nations of the old Inhabitants. |
| 1415 4 | Chimalpupuca, Son of Huizilbihuel , won the Town of Tequixtiauac , and reduced the rebellious Chalce under his command. |
| 1425 5 | Ischobalt brother of Huizilbihuel , by the valour of his Cousin Tlacaelle , freed himself from the Yoke of the Tepaneca , to whom the Mexicans had before been Tributaries; and added their dominions unto his Estate, conquering all the Nations round about him. After whose death the Electors by a joyned consent chose Tlacaelle for their King, as a man of whose vertue they had formerly made trial. But he very nobly refused it, saying, that it was more convenient for the Common-wealth, that another should be King, and that he should execute that which was for the necessity of the State, than to lay the whole burden upon his back: and that without being King, he would not leave to labour for the publick, as well as if |
| | he were. Upon this generous refusal they made choice of Moteczuma the first. |
| 1438 6 | Moteczuma , one of the Brothers of Chimalpupuca , brought in the custom of using no other Sacrifices at their Coronations, but of such Prisoners as the new King should first take in the wars. By the valour and good fortune of Tlacaelle , he subdued so many of the Nations (whose names I hold unnecessary to be here repeated) that he extended his Estate from one Sea to the other. |
| 1467 7 | Axayacaci , the Nephew of Ischobalt by his Son Tecocomoliqueto , enlarged his Empire by the conquest of Tezentepeque , 200 miles from Mexico , to fit himself with Sacrifices for his Coronation; and brought the Lord of Tlatelmeco who rebelled against him, to so hard a streit; that he was forced to break his neck from the top of a Temple. |
| 1479 8 | Ticocatzli , the Son of Axayacaci , added Twelve Cities, with their Territories, to the Mexican Empire. |
| 1484 9 | Abnczozin , Brother of Ticocatzli , extended his Borders to Guatimala , repaired or rebuilt a great part of Mexico , and brought thither a channel of fresh Water. |
| 1502 10 | Moteczuma II. Son of Axayacaci , before his Coronation conquered 44 Cities. He ordained that no Plebeian should bear any Office in his Court, and in the 18th year of his Reign was subdued by Cortez . |

As for this Cortez, to whom the Spaniards stand indebted for the Kingdom of Mexico, he was born in Medelline, a Town of Extremadura, 1485. and in the nineteenth year of his Age, employed himself in the Trade and business of America, for the improvement of his Fortunes, Anno 1511. he went as Clerk unto the Treasurer for the Isle of Cuba, where he husbanded his Affairs so well, by carrying over Kine, Sheep, and Mares, and bringing Gold for them in Exchange, that in short time he was able to put in 2000 Castellins for his stock, as Partner with Andrew de Duero, a wealthy Merchant. Grown richer, he was taken to be Partner with James Velasquez, in the Discovery of Tabasco, and the parts near Jucatan, An. 1518. And

And now resolved to venture all his stock both of Friends and Money, he furnished himself of eleven Ships, and with 550 men set sail from Spain, and arrived at the Island of Acomamill (now called Santa Cruz;) and sailing up the River of Tabasco, sacked the Town of Potonchon, the Inhabitants refusing to sell him victual. After this by the help of his Horse and Ordnance, he discomfited 40000 of the naked Savages, gathered together to revenge themselves for the sack of that Town; and received the King thereof in Vassallage to the Crown of Spain. Being told that Weltward he should meet with some Mines of Gold, he turned his course for the Haven of S. John de Ulloa; where landing he was entertained by Tendilli, Governour of the Town and Country for the King of Mexico: who understanding of his coming, and that he was the Servant of so great an Emperour (of which Tendilli had informed him by especial Messengers) he sent him many rich Presents both of Gold and Silver. Inflamed at the sight hereof, he resolved to go unto the place where such Treasures were; took possession of the Country in the name of Charles the fifth King of Spain and Emperour; and building there the Town of la vera Cruz, left in it 150 of his men. Attended by no more than 400 Foot, 15 Horse, and six pieces of Ordnance, he pursued his Enterprize; by practice gained unto him those of Zempoallan, and Tlascalla, whom he understood to be ill-affected to Moteczuma: assisted with whose Forces he passed on for Mexico, sacked the Town of Cholulla (a Town of 40000 households) in his march, kindly received into Mexico by the frightened King, whom he caused to acknowledge himself a Vassall to Spain, and to present him in the name of a Tribute, with so much Treasure, as amounted to 160000 Castellins of Gold. A quarrel growing not long after, Moteczuma the unhappy King was by one of his own Subjects killed in the Tumult, and the Spaniards driven out of the Town. But aided with the whole Forces of the Tlascalans, and a recruit of more Spaniards (sent thither on a Design against him) he made up an Army of 100000 Savages, 900 Spanish Foot, 80 Horse, 17 pieces of Ordnance; and having with great diligence made ready a Navy of 13 Gallies, and 6000 Canoes or Boats; laid siege unto the City both by Sea and Land. After a siege of three moneths, the City is taken, sacked and burnt, August 13. 1521. But afterwards rebuilt more beautifully than it was before. Thus fell this mighty Kingdom into the hands of the Spaniards, by the valour and good fortune of Cortez, a private Adventurer; endowed for that good service by Charles the fifth with the Town and Territory of Ticoantepeque, in the Province of Guanaxaca, and many other fair Estates in the Province of Mexico, and dignified with the title of Marquess of Valla.

As for the Kings of Mexico, they are said to have worn a Crown resembling that which is now used by the Dukes of Venice. His Coronation held with great pomp, but most bloody Sacrifices. His Revenues thought to be almost infinite, raised out of all Commodities and paid in kinde, whether Natural or Artificial only: the King participating of the fruits of all mens Labour, and sharing with them in their wealth: some paying in Cups full of powder of Gold, of two handfuls a piece; some Diadems, and Beads of Gold; Plates of Gold of three quarters of a yard long, and four fingers broad; Turkeſſe stones, Golden Targets, rich Feather-Pilures, &c. Not to say any thing of matters of inferior value: all which in such a wealthy and large Estate, must needs afford him a Revenue equal to the greatest Monarch. And for the encouragement of his Souldiers and Men of War, here were ordained three Orders of Knighthood, (or at least such distinctions of personal merit, as had resemblance to such Orders:) the first distinguished by a Red Ribband, the second called the Lyon or Tyger Knight, and the third the Gray Knight, all privileged amongst other things to be clothed in Cotton, wear Breeches; to adorn themselves with Gold and Silver, and to have Vessels gilt or painted; high points; and not permitted unto any else. But it is time that I proceed to the rest of the Provinces.

4. TLASCALLA lieth betwixt Mexicana and Guanaxaca, extended from one Sea to the other. The length hereof from Sea to Sea an hundred Leagues; the breadth along the shores of the Gulf reckoned 80 Leagues, on the South Sea not above eighteen. So called from the abundance of Maize which they make their bread of; the word in that Language signifying Locum Panis, or the place of Bread; the same with Bethlehem in the Hebrew.

The Country very plentiful both of Corn and Cattel, full of rich Pastures, and wonderfully stored with Maize: Level and plain except towards the Sea, where occurreth a large chain of craggy Mountains. The richer in the fruits of Nature for those fair and pleasant Rivers, wherewith it is watered; the principal of which 1. Rio de Grijalva, so called from John de Grijalva, who first discovered it; employed herein by James Velasquez, the advancer of Cortez. 2. Rio de Zempoall, so called from the Town of Zempoallan about which it riseth. 3. Zahuate, which makes its way thorow the chain of Mountains before mentioned, and falleth with the former into the Gulf. 4. Rio de Zactula, a River of the longest course in all this Province; rising near Tlascala, and falling many Leagues off into Mare del Sur. The People much of the same nature with those of Mexico, though upon jealousies of State their most bitter enemies; of which the Spaniards made good use; to advance their Conquests on that Kingdom.

Places of most importance in it, 1. Tlascala it self, which gives name to the Province: in former times governed after the form of a Common-wealth, according to the Democratical Models. Situate on a little Hill betwixt two Rivers: and in the middle of a large, but pleasant Plain, 60 miles in compass. So populous at the coming of the Spaniards hither, that it contained 300000 Inhabitants; now scarce 50000. It had four Streets (or rather Quarters) each of them governed by a Captain in time of war: and in the midst a Market-place so fair and spacious, that 30000 persons might assemble in it, to buy and sell, or for any other business. 2. Puebla de los Angeles, (the City of Angels) but most commonly Angelos; built by Sebastian Ramirez, An. 1531: in the way from Vera Cruz to the City of Mexico, from which last 22 leagues distant. A Bishops See; and thought to contain in it 1500 Families. 3. Zempoallan, on the River so named, the Inhabitants whereof did great service to Ferdinando Cortez in his conquest of Mexico. 4. Napulmeca; of great resort for a Fair of Cattel; and such a kinde of Court for ordering the trade thereof, as we call the Pie-powders. 5 Guaxocingo, a pleasant and well-peopled Town, situate at the foot of the burning Mountain beforementioned; by the ashes and embers whereof the fields are many times annoyed. 6 Segura, or Segura de la Frontera, in the Region of Tepecac, built by Cortez the next year after the conquest of Mexico, with fair streets and handsome houses; by whom peopled with Spaniards. 7 Vera Cruz, the first town built in this Countrey by the said Cortez, now a Bishop's See: situate neer unto the Gulf, and a great thorow-fare from thence to the City of Mexico, from which distant about 60 leagues. 8 S. John de Ulloa, the most noted Port of all this Province; fenced with a Peer against the fury both of winds and sea; defended naturally by Rocks and Quicklands lying before it, and by two Bulwarks well fortified and manned on both sides of the entrance. 9 Medellin, built by Cortez, An. 1525. and planted with Spaniards: so called in memory of a Town of the same name in Extremadura, in which he was born; situate on the banks of the River Almeria.

The Tlascalans were originally one of the seven Tribes, which drove the Chichimecas out of their possessions: and either finding no room left for them on the Banks of the Lake, or else willing to subsist alone; withdrew themselves from the rest, founded the City of Tlascalala, and there erected a Democratical Estate. Stomached for this by the other Tribes, and many times invaded by those of Mexico, after they had subdued the rest; they still maintained themselves against all attempts; and in the end assisted Cortez, in the destruction of that Kingdom they so deadly hated. Privileged for that reason by the Spaniards, and exempted from all kind of tribute (except it be an handful of Wheat for every person) and suffered to live under his protection in the former Government. The Province given us by this name, said to contain 200 good Towns and Burroughs, 1000 Villages and upwards; and in them 150000 of the Natives, besides Spanish Colonies. Distributed into 36 Clases or Rural Deantries, for Ecclesiastical Government, in which are thought to be 30 Convents and Religious Houses.

5. GUAXACA is bounded on the West, with Tlascalala; on the East, with Jucatan, and Chiapa, one of the Provinces of Guatemala; on the North, with the Bay of Mexico; and on the South, with Mare del Zurr. Extended on the South-sea to the length of an hundred miles, but on the Bay to fifty only: in breadth from Sea to Sea where it bordereth on Tlascalala, 120 leagues; not above 60 where it confineth on Chiapa. So called from Guaxaca once the chief Town of these parts, now named Atteguera.

The Air hereof very sound and sweet, and the Soil as fruitful: plentiful not only of those commodities which are common with the other Provinces of this Countrey; but of such quantities of Silks, and store of Mulberries, that if the Natives paid their Tithes as the Spaniards do, that very Revenue would suffice to endow five Bishopricks, as good as that which is there already. Scarce any River of this Countrey, but hath Sands of Gold: such plenty of Cocainele (a rich grain used in dying Scarlets, of which before) as also of Cassia, Gold, Silver, and other metals; that if the people did but adde some industry to the wealth of the Countrey, they might be the richest men in all America. But being naturally slothful, and impatient of labour, they lose all opportunities of gathering riches, and live but from hand to mouth, as we use to say. Docile enough, and so indulgent unto those who take pains to teach them, that here are reckoned 120 Convents of Dominican Friars, besides other Schools: these last conceived the greater number.

It is subdivided into many particular Provinces (we may call them Wapentakes or Hundreds) as 1 Misteca, 2 Tutopeque, 3 Zapoteca, 4 Guazacoalco, 5 Guextaxatla, and 6 the Vale of Guaxaca; this last most memorable, in that it gave the title of Marquess del Valle to the famous Cortez. Towns of most observation, 1 Tezcuotlan, once the chief Town of Zapoteca, and the seat of their King. 2 Cuicatlan, of great note for a Labyrinth not far off, hewn out of the Rock, but by whom none knoweth. 3 Antequera, in the Valley of Guaxaca, a stately City, and beautified with a fair Cathedral; as that with Marble-pillars of great height and thickness. 4 S. Misson in the Province of Zapoteca. 5 S. Jago in the Valley of Nexapa, seated upon a lofty hill. 6 Del Spiritu Santo, distant about three leagues from the shores of the Gulf, in the Province of Guazacoalco; the foundation of Gonsalvo de Sandoval, An. 1526. 7 Aguamilco, or Guamilco, a noted and convenient Port on the South-sea; much used by those which trade from Peru to Mexico, and from Mexico to any Port of the Southern Seas. By consequence rich, and therefore plundered to the purpose both by Drake, and Cavendish, in their voyages about the world. 8 Taccoatepeque a Port of the same Sea also, but of far less note. Burroughs and Villages in all 650. inhabited by 150000 of the Natives liable to tribute, besides women and persons under age, not reckoning the Spaniards in the number.

6. JUCUTAN, environed on three parts by the Sea like a Demi-Island, is fastened to the Continent only where it meets with Guaxaca; the furthest point of it opposite to the Isle of Cuba. Discovered first by Fernandez de Cordova, employed therein by Don Christopher Morante, An. 1517. and called Jucutan, not as some conceit it, from Jutan the son of Heber, who they think came out of the East, where the Scripture placeth him (Gen. 10. 30.) to inhabit here; but from Jucutan, which in the language of the Countrey signifies, What say you? For when the Spaniards at their first coming hither asked the name of the place; the Savages not understanding what they meant, replied Jucutan, that is, What say you? whereupon the Spaniards always after called it by this name.

The compass of it, taking the Province of Tabasco into the account, is said to be 900 miles, or 300 leagues. The Air hot, and the Countrey destitute of Rivers; not otherwise provided of water but by pits and trenches, which abundantly supply that want. Sufficiently barren, the soil not bearing Wheat, or any European fruits, nor many of the growth of America in other places. Nor have they Mines of Gold or Silver, or any other Metal, to enrich the people; who must either live by trades and labour, or else beg their bread. Nothing remarkable in the Countrey, but that here seemed to be some remnants of Christianity, at the Spaniards first coming hither: the people constantly observing a kind of Baptism, which they call in their own language a second birth, expressing by that word a Regeneration; not suffering any one to marry until so initiated. And possible enough it is, that this may be the Countrey upon which Madoc or Owen fell; who though he might by some good fortune be brought back to Wales, yet that he should make any such second voyage hither, as is said in their Chronicles, I by no means grant.

Towns of most observation in it, 1 Merida, almost in the navel of it, situate in the 20th degree of Latitude; the ordinary seat of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop: distant from the Sea on each side, about twelve leagues; and called thus from a Town of that name in Spain, with which it is thought to have some resemblance. 2 Valladolid, 30 leagues from Merida, beautified with a most sumptuous Monastery of Franciscan Friars. 3 Campeche, (or S. Francisco, as the Spaniards call it) situate on the shore of the Gulf. A Town when first known to the Spaniards, of 3000 Houses, and beautified with such monuments of art and industry; as shewed that there was somewhat in this people which was not barbarous, since that no more observable, than for being suddenly surprized by Parker, an English Capt. An. 1596. who carried away with him the Governour, the wealth of the Town, and many Prisoners; besides a great ship full of Gold, Silver, and other the like precious Commodities, designed for the King of Spain's own use. 4 Tabasco, situate in the best part of this Countrey, so different from all the rest, that it is made by some a distinct Province from it. By the Spaniards called Villa de Nuestra Señora de la Victoria, most commonly Victoria only; and that in memory of the first fortunate Victory which Cortez had upon this people, arming themselves against him for the sacking of Pontonchan. 5 Pontonchan, sacked by Cortez for denying to supply him with victual. 6 Salamanca, so called with reference to a Town of that name in Spain.

Along the Coast of this Countrey lie many Islands, viz. 1 La Zorra. 2 Desconocida. 3 Triangulo. 4 Vermeja. 5 Los Negrillos. 6 Los Alacranes, all within the Gulf. Without it, 7 Zaratan, 8 Pantoia, 9 Lamanay, 10 De Mucheres, or the Isle of Women; 11 Coxamul, by some called Acusamil. This last the biggest, as 15 leagues long, 5 broad; and the most remarkable, as being the usual way which the Spaniards travelled in their discoveries of this Countrey, from the Isle of Cuba. For here first landed Ferdinando de Cordoba, An. 1517. who passing over to Jucutan (but four leagues distant) brought back nothing but stripes. Here the next year arrived John de Grijalva, in the same pursuit; who passing by Jucutan to the Province of Guaxaca, left his name behind him to a River. And finally here landed the most fortunate Cortez, who coasting about the Demi-Island, landed near Tabasco, and there first handled his good fortune with a notable Victory. Yet neither the Island nor Peninsula discovered perfectly, till the year 1527. when both subdued by Francisco de Montejo, to the Crown of Spain. The Island now called Santa Cruz.

OF GUATIMALA

GUATIMALA is bounded on the North, by Jucatan, and the Gulf of Honduras; on the South, with Mare del Zur; on the East, (or the South-east rather) with Castilla Aurea; on the West, with New Spain. Extended 300 leagues in length, upon the Coasts of Mare del Zur; but measuring by a strait line, not above 240: the breadth thereof 180 leagues, where broadest; in most places narrower. So called from Guatemala the chief Province; as that from the prime City of it, honoured with the seat of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice.

The nature of the Soil and People (if differing in any material thing from those before) we will consider in the View of those several parts, into which this Country is divided. The principal whereof, 1 Chiapa, 2 Verapaz, 3 Guatemala specially so called, 4 Honduras, 5 Nicaragua, 6 Veragua. The rest of less note, easily reduced to these.

1. CHIAPA hath on the West, New Spain; on the East, Verapaz; on the North, part of Jucatan; and Mare del Zur, upon the South. Extended 40 leagues in length, not much less in breadth, and anciently inhabited by four Nations, all of several Languages.

The Soil not very natural for Corn or Fruits, though Pot-herbs brought from Spain thrive well, as do Beans and Lentils; yet Vines and other richer fruits seldom come to good. Wood-Vines they have, which yield a very pleasant pulp; and if well ordered, might be brought to afford more profit. Their trees, most of them greater than in other places, as Pines, Oaks, Cedars, and the Cypresses; whole Woods of Walnuts, but the Nut not so big as those of Europe. Some of their Trees yield Rosin, some such precious gums, as in other places are not usual; and some there are whose Leaves being dried into a powder, afford a sovereign plaster for excruciate sores. And they have need too often to make use of these Plasters, the Country being full of Snakes and other venomous Creatures (some of the Snakes no less than 20 foot in length) whose poison being strong and deadly, doth require such helps. Of the People nothing singular, that I have met with; but that they are more musical and exact in painting, than the rest of the Natives.

Towns of most note in it, 1 Ciudad Real, built by the Spaniards in the Country of the Chiapenses, at the foot of an hill; situate in a round Plain, encompassed about with Mountains like an Amphitheatre: afterwards made a Bishops See, and privileged by the Kings of Spain to be governed by such City-Magistrates as they call Alcaldes. 2 Chiapa, in a vale adjoining; before the building of the other, of most note in this Province: yet still before it in regard of its situation, this Valley being better fraught with Pears, Apples, Wheat and Maize, than all the rest of the Country. 3 Tecpatlan, once the chief of the Zoqueques, possessed of 25 Villages in this Province; now beautified with a Monastery of Dominican Friars. 4 Copanxatzila, the principal Town of twenty five which the Queleues held in this tract; remarkable for nothing but a Convent of the same Dominicans. 5 S. Bartholomews, another Town in the Territory of the same Queleues: neer which is said to be a great Pit, or opening of the earth, into which if any man casts a stone, though never so little, there presently followeth a loud and fearful noise, like a clap of thunder. 6 Guevetlan, built by Pedro de Alvaradi, when he was Governour of these parts; the chief Town of a little Province called Soconusco. 7 Casapualca, a small Burrough, but memorable for a Well in the fields adjoining, the waters whereof are noted to rise and fall, as the Ocean doth flow or ebbe, and at equal distances of time. Of thirteen Townships which the Zelteles were possessed of, I finde no one named; though painted all of them, and set forth to the eye of the Traveller, with Cocinele, of which their Territory hath good plenty.

And now I am fallen upon these Rarities of nature, I cannot but take notice (though somewhat out of my Method) of a River by the Spaniards called Rio Blanco, which turns wood to stones: of a Spring in the Cantred of Tafixa, which in the Summer is full of water, in the Winter dry; of another in the same Cantred, which for one three years, though it rain never so little, is full of water, and the next three years hath none at all; and so successively by turns: and finally, that the chief River of the Province, having received into it many lesser streams, is swallowed up neer a Village of the Chiapenses, called Oiztulan, never after seen. None of them famed for Golden Sands, as are those of Guaxaca; though it be thought there be some Veins of gold and silver, but hitherto neglected for want of Slaves to work in the Mines.

2 VERAPAZ is bounded on the West, with Chiapa; on the East, with Guatemala, and Honduras; on the North, with Jucatan; and on the South, with the Territory of Soconusco. In Latine called Provincia Vera Pacis, by the Spaniards Verapaz; because not conquered by the sword, but won to the obedience of the King of Spain, by the preaching of the Dominican Friars.

The

The Country 30 Leagues in length, and as much in breadth, full of high Hills and deep Valleys, but no fruitful Plains; generally overgrown with Woods, very large and thick, which so hinder the free passage of the winds, that the Aire hereof is very shewery: Inomuch that for nine monthes in the year they have always rain, not altogether free from it in the other three. By reason of this moisture much annoyed with Mosquitos, a kinde of Gnats, very injurious to their Fruits, with which otherwife (as with Fish and other necessaries) they were well provided. No Mines of Gold or Silver discovered hitherto, though the Spaniards have many times in vain attempted it. Instead whereof some of their Trees drop a kinde of Amber, which they call Liquid Amber; some, Mastick, and some other Gums: they have also many Medicinal woods, as Sarzaparilla, that called China wood, and many others.

The people tractable and conform to the Spanish Government, except the Lecandones, and Pachutecl, some Remainers of the ancient Salvages; who keeping in the Mountains and craggy Rocks of this Country, have hitherto retained both their Native freedom, and their old Idolatry. No Towns herein possessed by the Spaniard, and but fourteen Villages in all, in which they live mingled with the old Inhabitants. The principal of these St. Augustines, not so much memorable in it self, as for the neighbourhood of a Cave betwixt two Mountains; from which the Rain descending turns into Alabaster, naturally fashioned into Pillars and other Powtratures. Into which also many Springs do convey their waters, which there being joyned into a body, make an handfom River, able almost at the first appearance to bear a Boat. A Port they also have at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce: but of so little use and Trading, that I finde no name for it, unless it should be that Tzapapa which Herrera speaks of, by whom placed in Guatemala.

3. GUATIMALA specially so called, is bounded on the West, with Verapaz, from which parted by the River Xicalapa; on the East, with Nicaragua; on the North, with Honduras; and on the South, with Mare del Zur, or the Pacificque Ocean. Extended 30 leagues from the North to the South, and on the shores of Mare del Zur, not above seventeen. But reckoning in Tzalcos, Chaluteca, and S. Savians, three adjoining Regions, by some made Provinces distinct; the dimensions of it must be much greater both for length and breadth.

The Country Mountainous, but withall very full of Rivers; by consequence commodious, both for fishing and hunting. Fruitfull of Wheat, Maize, and other Provisions, but those fruits not lasting. Not so much subject unto rain as they are in Verapaz, but more troubled with winds. Full of rich Pastures, and those Pastures of great Herds of Cattel; good store of Cotton-wooll, some Balsamm, and other Medicinal Liquors; as also of the best Sulphur, and many Apothecaries Drugs, which I have no skill of. The people Pusillanimous and fearfull, greater proficient in Christianity and Civility, than most of the Salvages: but so that it is thought they would relapse again to their ancient Paganisms, and revive again their old barbarous customs, if not held in by the byidle of fear, and the curb of power. The men affirmed to be good Archers, and the Women good Spinners.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1 Guacapa, a River of a course but of 13 leagues, yet of great depth, and Navigable half the way; which falleth into Mare del Zur. 2 Lempas, watering the Burrough of St. Savians; which hath its rise from a great Lake, and his fall in the same Sea also. Here is also said to be a Lake near the Village of Tstepeque, of the waters whereof are made both Sulphur and Allom. And here is said to be a Volcano, or burning Mountain, which though it hath vomited no Fire of late, the matter of it being spent; yet the sad Monuments of his Furies do remain among them; another not far off which still casts out smok.

Towns of most note, 1 Guatemala, or St. Jago de Guatemala, the chief Town of the Province, situate on a little River betwixt both Volcanos, by one of which most terribly wasted, Anno 1541. But being re-edified, it hath since exceedingly flourished, by reason of the Bishops See, the residence of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice. 2 St. Salvador, 40 leagues East-wards from Guatemala, by the Natives called Guzuculan; situate on the River Guacapa, seven leagues from the Sea, and neighboured by a great Lake of five leagues compass. 3 Acaxutla, at the mouth of the same River, the Port Town to St. Savians. 4 St. Trinidad, by the Natives called Samsonate, the most noted Empory of this Country; the Place of Bartery betwixt the Inhabitants of New Spain, and those of Peru. 5 St. Michaels, two leagues from the Bay of Fonsica, which serves unto it for an Haven. 6 Xeres de Fontera, the chief Town of the Cantred of Chulucan (by which name it was formerly known) situate on the Frontiers towards Nicaragua, and to the South-east of the Bay of Fonsica: that Bay so named in honour of Roderick Fonsica Bishop of Burges, and President of the Council for the Indies, An. 1532. by Giles Gonzales de Avila, who first discovered it. About and in this Bay are ten little Islands, four of which inhabited, and plentifully furnished with Wood, Water, and Salt.

4. HONDURAS hath on the South, Guatemala, specially so called; on the West, the Bay, or Arm of the Sea, called Golfo Dulce, by which parted from Verapaz: on the North, and East, the Sea called Mare del Norte; on the South-East, Nicaragua; on the South, Guatemala specially so called. In length from East to West by the banks of that Sea 150 leagues, and about 80 leagues in breadth from North to South. The name of Honduras, or Fonduras, imposed upon it from the depth of the Sea, about the principal Head-land of it, called the Cape of Honduras.

The whole Country either Hills, or Valleys, little Champagne in it; fruitful of Maize and Wheat, and of very rich Pasture; made so by the constant overflowings of their Rivers about Michaels; which do not onely foyl their Grounds, but water their Gardens. The principal of them, 1 Hangara; 2 Chamalucon. 3 Ulna, all neighboured by fertile fields, and pleasant Meadows. Some Mines of Gold and Silver are conceived to be here, but not yet discovered: the people being so slothfull and given to idleness; that they rather live on Roots, than take pains in tilling of their Land; and therefore Nicaragua. fore not easily intreated to toyl for others, but where necessity and strong hand doe compell them to it.

Towns of most note, 1 Valladolid, by the Natives called Commyagna, 40 leagues distant from the Sea, situate in a pleasant and fruitful Valley, on the banks of the River Chimalucon; and honoured with a Bishops See, fixed here about the year 1558. built near the place where once Francisco de Monteio, Governour of this Province had planted a Colony of Spaniards, Anno 1530. by the name of S. Maria de Commyagna. 2 Gracias di Dios, 30 leagues Westward of Valladolid, built by Gabriel de Rojas, An. 1530. to be a place of defence for those who worked in the Mines, against the Savages. But finding himself unable to make it good, he defaced and left it; Re-edified again by Gonsalvo de Alvarado, and since well inhabited. 3 S. Peters, eleven leagues distant from the Port of Cavallos, but seated in a most healthy air; and therefore made the dwelling place of the Farmers of the Kings Customs, who have their houses in this Town, and follow their business in the other, as occasion is. 4 Porto de Cavallos, so called from some horses thrown over-board in a violent Tempest; the most noted Haven of these parts, and strong by natural situation: but so ill guarded and defended, that in the year 1591. it was pillaged by Captain Christopher Newport, and An. 1596. by Sir Anthony Sherley. Deserted on those spoils, and not since inhabited. 5 S. Thomas de Castile, 18 leagues from Cavallos, naturally strong, and fortified according to the Rules of Art: to which, as to a place of more strength and safety, Alonso Briado de Castilla President of the Sessions of Guatemala, removed both the Inhabitants and Trade of Cavallos. 6 Traxillo, seated on the rising of a little Hill betwixt two Rivers (one of them that which is called Haguana) distant from Cavallos 40 leagues to the East, and 60 leagues to the North of Valladolid: surprized and pillaged by the English, An. 1576. Not far hence towards the North-East lieth the Cape of Honduras, from whence the shore drawing inwards till it joyn with Jucutan, makes up a large and goodly Bay called the Gulf of Honduras. 7 S. George de Olancha, so named of the Valley Olancha, in which it is seated; a Valley noted heretofore for some golden Sands, which Guaquepe, a River of it, was then said to yield.

5. NICARAGUA is bounded on the North, with Honduras; on the East, with Mare del Nort and the Province of Veragua; on the South, with Mare del Zur; on the West, with Guatemala. By Diego Lopez de Salcedo, who first subdued it, it was called the New Kingdom of Leon; but the old name by which they found it called at their coming thither, would not be so lost.

The Country destitute of Rivers, except that part hereof towards Veragua, called Costa Rica, reckoned a Province of it self. The want hereof supplied by a great Lake, or a little Sea, called the Lake of Nicaragua, 120 leagues in compass, ebbing and flowing like the Sea; upon the banks of which stand many pleasant Villages and single houses. A Lake well stored with Fish, but as full of Crocodiles: and having made its way by a mighty Cataract, emptieth it self into Sea about four leagues off. Not very rich in Corn, (most of which is brought them from Peru) but well stored with Cattel: level and plain, and shadowed with frequent Trees; one amongst others of that nature, that a man cannot touch any part of it, but it withereth presently. Affirmed to be as full of Parrots, as England of Crows; stored with great plenty of Cotton-wool, and abundance of Sugar-Canes. In a word so pleasing generally to the eye, that the Spaniards call it by the name of Mabumets Paradise.

The people for the most part, speak the Spanish tongue, and willingly conform themselves to the Spanish garb, both of behaviour and apparel: well weaned from their old barbarous customs, retained onely by some Mountainers, whom they call Chontales. All of good stature, and of colour indifferent white. They had before they received Christianity, a settled and politick form of Government. Only as Solon appointed no Law for a mans killing of his Father, so had this people none for the killer of a King; both of them conceiving that men were not so unnatural, as to commit such crimes. A Thief they judged not to death, but adjudged him to be a slave to that man whom he had robbed, till by his service he had made satisfaction. A course more mercifull, and not less just, than the loss of life.

Chief Towns hereof: 1 Leon, or Leon de Nicaragua, situate on the Lake aforesaid, the Residence of the Governour, and the Bishops See; built in a sandy soyl, and begirt with Woods. 2 Granada, on the same Lake, sixteen leagues from Leon; beautified with a fair Church and a strong Cattle, both founded by Ferdinando de Cordova: the City seated in a liberal and wealthy soyl, well furnished with Sugar-Canes; for the refining of which here are many Work-houses, which they call Ingenios. 3 Segovia, distant from the former about 30 leagues, rich in veins of silver. 4 Juen, (all called according to the names of some Towns in Spain) situate at the end of the Lake aforesaid; from whence by a long and narrow Channel it disembogueti into the Sea, near the Port of S. John. 5 Realio, about a league distant from the Port of Possession, in the Latitude of 12 degrees and 40 minutes; inhabited for the most part, by Shipwrights and Mariners. 6 Nicoia, giving name to a little Territory, within the bounds whereof standeth 7 Avarinas also. 8 Cartago, 40 leagues from Nicoia, equally distant from both Seas, on each of which it hath a convenient Port: this Town the principal of that part, which is called Costa Rica.

6. VERAGUA bath on the West, Costa Rica; on the East, bounded with the Distric of Panama; washed on both other sides by the Sea: extended 50 leagues in length from West to East; not above 25, where narrowest, from one Sea to the other. The name given to it from the River Veragua, of greatest note in it at the first Discovery.

The soyl hereof Mountainous and exceeding barren, not fit for tillage, and less usefull in feeding Cattel; it sufficiently provided of Maise and Pot-herbs: but else of little necessary for the life of man; unless the people could eat Silver, or drink Aurum Potabile. Of both which Metals, but especially of Gold, here are such never-perishing Mines, that the Spaniards think them able to supply all wants, and cure all Diseases. Once being asked what made them so greedy of that Metal; it was answered, That they were much Veragua. much troubled with grief of heart, for which Gold was a most Sovereign Medicine. And as the Country, such the people, hardy, courageous, and warlike, and such as bear the Spanish yoke with great impatience: the stoutest and most untameable people, being bred most commonly in mountainous and woody Countries.

Chief Rivers of this little Province, 1 Veragua which gives name unto it. 2 Belen, by the old Inhabitants called Tetra; at the mouth of which Columbus purposed to have settled a Spanish Colony, for the better transporting of his Gold. But finding that the Cannel, on the ceasing of some rain which had fallen before, was become so shallow, that no ship could go in, or out, he gave over that purpose. 3 La Trinidad. 4 La Concepcion; all falling into Mare del Noort. Their chief Towns, 1 Concepcion, on the Mouth of that River, the seat of the Governour. 2 La Trinidad, on the banks of that River, near the port of Belen, and six leagues East-wards of La Concepcion. 3 St. Foy (oppidum St. Fidis) twelve leagues from Concepcion on the South; where the Spaniards melt, and cast their Gold into Bars and Ingots. 4 Carlos, not far from the shores of Mare del Zur. 5 Philippina, on the West of Carlos. Each seated on a large and capacious Bay. Before which Bays lie a Frie of Islands, which the Spaniards call Zebaco, from the chief amongst them. Thirty in all; the principal, Zebaco, Cabaio, St. Marie, St. Martha, inhabited in former times, now not much frequented; the people being dragged into the Continent to work in the Mines.

This Country oweth its first Discovery unto divers men, according to the several Members and divisions of it. The last in order, being the first that was discovered, but the last that was conquered had the honour to be visited by Columbus himself. Who driving up and down these Coasts in the year 1502. hit on the entrances of the River, which afterwards he caused to be called Belen; where hearing that there was plenty of Gold in the Mines of Hurira not far off, he intended to fortifie. But the River failing him as was said before, and finding nothing fit to sustain his men; he bent himself, though unwilling, to a further search. He had before touched upon Honduras also, but I find not that he landed on it: the settling of these Countries being destinated to another hand. Twenty years after this the most fortunate Cortez having fully quieted and composed the affairs of Mexico, resolved to make his Master Lord of the rest of America. And to that end sent out his Officers and Commanders into several parts. By Pedro de Alvarado he subdued Guatemala; Hondura, by Christopher de Olid: Veragua, and Nicaragua, by Gonsalvo de Cordoba. But fearing lest the conquered Provinces might revolt again, he resolved to visit them in person. Attended by a choice Band of 150 Horse, and as many Foot, and 3000 Mexicans, he began his journey in October, 1524. and held on his progress as far as to Truxillo: where finding that Gonsalvo de Cordoba had so plaid his Game, as there was no necessity of going further, he made a stand, having marched above 400 leagues with his little Army. Returning back another way, in April 1526. he came home to Mexico; with whose return we conclude also our survey of the Northern Peninsula, containing all America Septentrionalis, or Mexicana.

And so much for MEXICANA.

PERUANA

PERUANA, the other of the two great Peninsulas, into which the vast Continent of the NEW WORLD doth now stand divided, hath the form of a Pyramid reserved; more answerably thereunto than Africa, though that so resembled. Joyned to the other by a strait and narrow Isthmus, called the Straits of Darien, whereof we shall have opportunity to speak more anon: which looks but like a stone mis-laid in so great a building; or the first step, by which we are to climb the top, as in other Pyramids.

The name derived from Pern, the chief Province of it; the Circumnavigation said to be 1700 miles. Nothing else to be said in the general, but what will serve more fitly for particular places; except it be the description of some prime Mountains and principal Rivers: which being of too long a course to be reckoned unto any one particular Province, may more properly deserve place here. Of these the chief 1 Orellana, or the River of Amazons, called by the first name from Francisco de Orellana, a Spaniard, who first discovered it; by the second, from the Amazons, a kind of stout and warlike Women, who are said to have inhabited on the banks thereof. The Fountain of it in Pern, the fall in the North-Sea, or Mare del Noort. A River of so long a course, that the said Orellana is reported to have sayled in it 5000 miles, the several windings and turnings of it being reckoned in: and of so violent a current, that it is said to keep its natural taste and colour, above 30 miles after it falleth into the Sea; the Channel of it of that breadth, where it leaveth the Land, that it is accomplished 60 leagues from one point to the other. 2 Orenoque, Navigable 1000 miles by ships of burden, and 2000 miles by Boats and Pinnaces; having received into it an hundred Rivers, openeth into the same Sea with 16 mouths, which part the Earth into many Islands (some equal to the Isle of Wight): the most remote of those Channels 300 miles distant from one another. By some it is called Raliana, from Sir Walter Raleigh, who took great pains in the discovery and description of it; or rather in discovering it so far, as to be able to describe it. 3 Maragony, of a longer course than any of the other, affirmed to measure at the least 6000 miles, from his first rising to his fall; and at his fall into the Sea, to be no less than 70 leagues from one side to the other. More properly to be called a Sea, than many of those great Lakes, or largest Bays, which usually enjoy that name. 4 Rio de la Plata, a River of a less course than the other, but equal unto most in the world besides; in length from its first Fountain 2000 miles, in breadth at his fall into the Sea, about 60 leagues; and of so violent a stream, that the Sea for many leagues together, altereth not the taste of it. All these, as they do end their Race in the Atlantick, so they begin it from the main body of the Andes, or at least some Spur, or branch of that great body.

But before we venture further on more particulars, we are to tell you of these Andes, that they are the greatest and most noted Mountains of all America; beginning at Timama a Town of Popayan, in the New Realm of Granada; and thence extended South-wards to the Straits of Magellan, for the space of 1000 leagues and upwards. In the breadth about 20 leagues, where they are at the narrowest; and of so vast an height wihal, that they are said to be higher than the Alpes, or the head of Caucasus, or any of the most noted Mountains in other parts of the World. Not easie of ascent, but in certain Paths, by reason of the thick and unpassable Woods, with which covered in all parts thereof which lie towards Pern (for how it is on the other side, or by what people it is neighboured, is not yet discovered;) barren, and craggy too wihal, but so full of venomous Beasts, and poysonous Serpents, that they are said to have destroyed a whole Army of one of the Kings of Pern, in his march that way. Inhabited by a people as rude and savage as the place, and as little hospitable. The most noted Mountain of America, as before was said, and indeed the greatest of the World. Of fame sufficient of themselves, not to be greatness by the addition of impossible Fignments, or improbable Fictions. Among which last I reckon that of Abraham Ortelius a right learned man, who will have these Mountains to be that which the Scripture calleth by the name of Sephar, Gen. 10.30. and there affirmed to be the utmost Eastern limit of the sons of Jektan: the vanity and inconsequences of which strange conceit, we have already noted when we were in India.

Proceed we now unto the particular descriptions of this great Peninsula, comprehending those large and wealthy Countries, which are known to us by the names of 1 Castella Aurea. 2 The New Realm of Granada. 3 Pern. 4 Chile. 5 Paraguay. 6 Brasil. 7 Guyana. and 8 Paria, with their several Islands. Such other Isles as fall not properly and naturally under some of these, must be referred unto the general head of the American Islands, in the close of all.

CASTELA del ORO.

CASTELA del ORO, Golden Castile, (Aurea Castella, as the Latines) is bounded on the East and North, with Mare del Noort; on the West, with Mare del Zur, and some part of Veragua, on the South with the New Realm of Granada. Called by the name of Castile, with reference to Castile in Spain, under the favour and good fortune of the Kings, whereof it was first discovered: Aurea was added to it, partly for distinction sake; and partly in regard of that plenty of Gold which the first Discoverers found in it. It is also called Terra Firma, because one of the first parts of Firm land, which the Spaniards touched at, having before discovered nothing but some Islands only.

The soyl and people being of such several tempers, as not to be included in one common Character, we will consider both apart in the several Provinces, of 1 Panama. 2 Darien. 3 Nova Andalusia. 4 S. Mariba. and 5 the little Province De la Hacha.

1. PANAMA, or the district of Panama, is bounded on the East, with the Gulf of Straba, by which parted from the main land of this large Peninsula; on the West, with Veragua on the Provinces of Guatemala in Mexicana; washed on both the other sides with the Sea. So called, of Panama, the Town of most esteem herein, and the Juridical resort of Castella Aurea.

It taketh up the narrowest part of the Strait, or Isthmus, which joyns both Peninsulas together: not above 7 or 8 leagues over in the narrowest place, betwixt Panama and Porto Bello, if measured by a strait line from one Town to the other; though 18 leagues according to the course of the Road betwixt them, which by reason of the Hills and Rivers is full of turnings. Of some attempts to dig a Channel, through this Isthmus to let the one Sea into the other; and of the memorable expedition of John Oxenham over it by land, we have spoke already.

The air hereof foggy, but exceeding hot, and consequently very unhealthy, chiefly from May unto November: the soyl either mountainous and barren, or low and stony; naturally so unfit for grain, that it yieldeth nothing but Maize, and that but sparingly; better for pasturage, in regard of its plenty of grass, and the goodness of it: so full of Swine at the Spaniards first coming hither, that they thought they never should destroy them; now they complain as much of their want, or paucity. As for the Inhabitants, whatsoever they were formerly, is not now material: most of the old stock rooted out by the Spaniards, and no new ones planted in their room; so that the Country in all parts; except towards the Sea, is almost desolated, or forsaken.

The Country as before was said, of little breadth, and yet full of Rivers: the principal whereof, 1 Chagre, by the Spaniards called Rio de Lagartos, or the River of Crocodiles, (many of which are harboured in it) which falleth into Mare del Noort betwixt Nombré de Dios, and Porto Boleno. 2 Sardinilla. 3 Sardina. 4 Rio de Colubros, or the River of Snakes; and 5 Rio de Comagre, all falling into the same Sea. Then on the other side 6 Chepo, whose sands in former times yielded plenty of Gold: 7 Rio de las Balsas, on the banks whereof groweth great store of timber for the building of ships. 8 De Congos, emptying it self into the Bay of S. Michael.

Towns of most note, 1 S. Philip seated on a safe and strong Haven called Porto Belo: built in this place by the appointment of King Philip the second, but by the counsel of John Baptista Antonelli to be the staple of the trade betwixt Spain and Panama: partly in regard of the unhealthiness of Nombré de Dios, where it was before; but chiefly because that Town was found to have lien too open to the invasions of the English. Fortified with two strong Castles (on each side of the Haven one) but for all that furnished and pillaged by the English under Captain Parker, in the year 1601. 2 Nombré de Dios, conveniently seated in the Upper-sea, for a Town of trade; and for that reason made the Staple of such commodities as were trucked betwixt Pern, and Spain; which brought for Pern; or brought from Pern, and from hence conveyed over the Land to Panama, and there shipped for Pern; or brought from Pern, and landed at Panama, were by land brought unto this place, and here shipped for Spain. It took this name from Didaco Niqueza a Spanish Adventurer, who having been distressed by tempests was driven in here; and bid his men go on shore en nombre de Dios, in the name of God. In reference hereunto by the English, borrowing a Greek word, it is called Theonimia. Of great trade once, on the occasion before mentioned: but in the year 1584. the trade was removed unto Porto Belo, by the counsel of Antonelli before named; and some years after that, the Inhabitants also. To hasten which, the taking of this Town by Sir Francis Drake, served exceeding fitly. 3 Acla, on the Coast of the same Sea also, but on the South-Side, East of Nombré de Dios. 4 Nata, or S. Jago de Nata, situate on the lower Sea on the borders of Veragua. East of Nombré de Dios. 5 Panama, the chief City of Castella Aurea, the Residence of about 30 leagues on the West of Panama. 6 Panama, the chief City of Castella Aurea, the Residence of the Governour, of the Courts of Justice, honoured with a Bishops See, a Suffragan to the Archbishop of Lima; and beautified with three fair Monasteries; and a Colledge of Jesuits. Seated in the 9 degree, or North: and so near the Sea, that the Waves come close unto the Wall. A Town through which which the Wealth of Spain, and Peru, passeth every year: yet not containing above 350 houses; the number of the Souldiers greater than that of the Citizens. 6 S. Crux la Real, a league from Panama; inhabited totally by Negroes brought out of Guinea.

This Province was the first of those on the Firm land, which were discovered by Columbus. But I find not that he left any name unto it, or to any River or Promontory of it, but only to a little Island lying on the shore near Porto Belo, which he caused to be called Los Bastimentos; because being cast hereon by chance, he found good store of Maize and other provisions, called Bastimentos by the Spaniard. But the chief Islands of this Province, are those which Columbus never saw, called the Islands of Pearls; situate in the Southern Sea, opposite to Panama, from which distant 17 leagues or thereabouts. In number above twenty, but two only inhabited, the one called Tararequi, the other Del Rio; the rest of them rather Rocks than Islands. Much famed not only for the abundance, but the excellency of the Pearls there found; fairer than those of Margarita, and Cubagua, so much commended. Once very profitable to the Spaniards, till by their cruelty and covetousness they unpeopled the Islands, and destroyed the Pearls, inhabited now only by a few Negroes, and some Slaves of Nicaragua, who live here to attend the grazing of their Masters Cattel, in the fields and pastures.

2 DARIEN hath on the North, the Distrikt of Panama; on the South New Granada; on the East, the River of Darien, whence it hath its name, and the Gulf of Uraba; and on the West, the main Southern Ocean.

The Country of a temperate Air, and a fruitful Soil: so happy in the production of Melons and such other fruits, that within twenty days after they are sown, they are fully ripe. With like felicity it bringeth forth Grapes, and other fruits; either natural hereunto, or brought hither from Europe. A tree here is called Hovo, not elsewhere known; the shade of which is conceived to be so wholesome, that the Spaniards seek them out to sleep under them. Out of the Blossoms of it they distil a perfumed Water; of the Bark a Bath or Lavatory, good for the opening of the pores, and redress of weariness; and from the Roots they draw a Liquor which they use to drink of. Of Beasts and Fowl great plenty, whether wild or tame; and some of them not heard of in other places.

Principal Rivers hereof, 1 Darien, whence it hath the name; A clear water, and much drank of, but of a slow course and a narrow channel; able to bear no bigger Vessels than those of one piece of wood used among the Salvages; we may call them Troughs. But with this slow course it falleth at last into the Gulf of Uraba, a large Arm of the Sea, which pierceth far into the Land, and at the mouth is said to be eight leagues over. 2 Rio de las Redas, and 3 De la Trepadera, both emptying themselves into the Gulf of Uraba: 4 Corobaci, on the same side of the Country also: 5 Beru, a River of the South-Sea, not much observable, but that some have laboured to derive the Etymologie of Peru, from thence.

Towns of most note, though few of any, 1 Darien, on the Bank of the Gulf of Uraba; oftentimes so unhealthy by the Mists which do thence arise, that the Inhabitants use to send their sick people to the fresh Air of Corobaci, to revive their spirits. By the Spaniards it was called S. Maria Antigua, afterwards the Antique of Darien, being new built by one Eucifus a Spanish Adventurer. An. 1510. and grew so suddenly into wealth and reputation, that within four years it was made an Episcopal See. But being built too near the Banks of the Darien, in a moorish and unhealthy place, both the Episcopal See, and the chief Inhabitants were removed to Panama. Some other Colonies of the Spaniards have been planted here; but either forsaken by themselves, or destroyed by the Salvages: so that now from Acla to the bottom of the Gulf of Uraba, the Spaniards have not in their own hands either Town or Village. Nothing but some few scattered houses in all that tract, for the use of the Natives; who formerly made their Nests like Birds, on the tops of trees. 2 Bliza, 3 Los Angadesor, two small Villages on the other side of the Country, possessed by the Salvages. Besides these, and some sorry sheds here and there dispersed, all the rest a Desert. So that not being able to maintain the reputation of a distinct Province, the government hereof hath of late been devolved on the Presiēt of Panama.

3 NOVA ANDALUSIA hath on the West, the River Darien, and the Gulf of Uraba; on the East, the Province of S. Martha; on the North, the main Ocean; and on the South, the new Realm of Granada. So called with reference to Andalusia a Province of Spain. Called also by some Writers Carthagena, from Carthagena now the chief City of it.

It is in length from the Gulf of Uraba to the River of Magdalen, 80 Leagues, and neer upon as much in breadth. Mountainous, and very full of woods, but in those woods great store of Rosin, Gums, and some kinds of Balsams. Here is also said to be a Tree, which whosoever toucheth, is in danger of poisoning. The Soil, by reason of the abundance of rain which falls upon it, very moist and spewie; inso-much that few of our European fruits have prospered in it. Few veins of Gold in all the Country, except only in that part hereof which is called Zena; where the Spaniards at their first coming, found great store of treasure. But it was taken out of the Graves and Monuments of the dead, not found in Mines, or digged for as in other places: such being the reputation of that Territory in former times, that the Nations far and neer did carry the bodies of their Dead to be buried in it, with great quantity of Gold, Jewels, and other Riches. The Natives very fierce and stout, while they were a People: But giving the Spaniards many overthrowes before fully conquered, they have been so confumed and wasted by little and little, that there are not many of them left.

Chief Rivers hereof, 1 Rio de los Redos, and 2 Rio de los Anades, both falling into the Bay of Uraba. 3 Zena, which passing through the Province above-mentioned, to which it gives name, falleth into the Ocean, Ocean, over against the Island Fuerte. 4 S. Martha, of long course, and much estimation. Fortified in the most Southern parts of the New Realm of Granada; near the Equinoctial; it passeth through the whole length of that Kingdom; and at the last mingleth its streams with those of the River Magdalen, not far from Mopox. By the Natives it is called Caucu. And as for Mountains, those of most note are a continual Ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Cordillera, by the Natives Able; craggy and difficult of ascent; in breadth affirmed to be 20 leagues; but the length uncertain, the furthest ends of them towards the South not discovered hitherto.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Carthagena, situate in a sandy Plain, fifteen degrees distant from the Equator: well built, and for the bigness of it, of great wealth and store; consisting of 500 houses, or thereabouts; but those near and hand some beautified with a Cathedral Church, three Monasteries, and one of the best Havens of all America. Well fortified on both sides, since the taking of it by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1585, took it by assault, and carried thence besides innumerable fairs, 240 brass pieces of Ordnance. 2 Tulu, by the Spaniards called S. Jago, twelve miles from Carthagena, memorable for the most sovereign Balsam of all these parts, called the Balsam of Tolu, which is inferior to all to the Balsam of Egypt. 3 Mopox, or Santa Cruz de Mopox, near the Confluences of the Rivers of Martha and Magdalen. 4 Baraneta de Malambo, on the banks of the River Magdalen, six leagues from the Ocean, where such Commodities as are brought by Sea for the New Realm of Granada, are stored up, shipped and carried by Lighters, or small Boats up the River: 5 Sebastian de Bana, situate by Alfonso de Ojeda, An. 1508. in the first attempt upon this Country, situate on a rising ground near the mouth of the Bay of Uraba, a league and a half from the Sea. 6 Villa de Maria, 30 leagues South of Carthagena, but of no great note.

4. S. MARTHA hath on the West, Nova Andalusia; on the East, Rio de la Hacha; on the North, the main Ocean; on the South, the New Realm of Granada: about 70 leagues in length, and as much in breadth. So called from S. Martha the chief City of it.

The Country mountainous and barren, not fit for pasturage, or tillage; productive notwithstanding of Limons, Oranges, Pomgranates, and such other fruits as are brought hither out of Spain. The air on the Sea-Coasts very hot and stinking, and in the midland parts as cold, because of the neighbourhood of some Mountains always covered with snow. The principal of those Mountains, a long Ridge of Hills, by the Spaniards called Las Sierras Nevadas, or the Snowy Mountains; discernable by the Marriners 30 leagues at Sea; by whom called the Mountains of Tairona, from a Vally of that name beneath them; the Inhabitants whereof by the advantage of those Hills, have hitherto preserved their liberty against the Spaniards. The rest, though subject to the Spaniards, have their several Kings, affirmed to be an arrogant and ill-natured people; made worse perhaps than indeed they are, by reason of their hate to the Spaniards, whose government they live under with great unwillingness.

Chief Rivers of this Province, 1 Rio Grande de la Magdalena; which hath its fountain in the Hills of the New Realm of Granada, not far from the Equator; but its fall into the Ocean betwixt Carthagena and St. Martha, in the Latitude of 12 degrees: where dividing it self, it maketh an Island of five leagues long, and after openeth into the Sea with two wide mouths; discernable for ten leagues space from the rest of the Main, by the taste and colour of the water. 2 Rio de Cazaze, which falleth into the Magdalen, as doth also 3 Casar, by the Natives called Pompatan: which having its fountain near the City of Kings in the Vale of Upar, passeth directly towards the South, till it meet with 4 Ayuma, another River of this Tract: accompanied with whom he runneth Westward for the space of 70 leagues, and endeth in the great River of Magdalen, as before is said, near the Forrest of Alpuente. 5 Bubia, 6 Pirax, 7 Don Diego, 8 Palamin, 9 Gayza, falling into the Ocean.

Towns of most observation, 1 St. Martha, situate on the shores of the Ocean, in the Latitude of ten degrees and 30 minutes; neighboured by a safe and convenient Haven, defended from the winds by an high Mountain near unto it, and honoured with an Episcopal See. Small, and ill built when it was at the best; nor well recovered of the spoil it suffered by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1595. and by Sir Anthony Sherley the next year after. 2 Tenariffe, on the Banks of the Magdalen, 40 leagues from St. Martha. 3 Tanalameque, by the Spaniards called Villa de las Palmas, twenty leagues to the South of Tenariffe. 4 Ciudad de los Reyes, or the City of the Kings, situate in the Vale of Upar, on the banks of a deep and violent River, called Guatapori; which not far off falleth into the Cesar: ill neighboured by the Inhabitants of the Vale of Tobrona, not hitherto reduced under the command of the Kings of Spain. 5 Ramada, by the Spaniards called New Salamanca, in the same Valley of Upar; as liberally furnished with veins of Brasse, as it is with Stones. 6 Ocana, on the Western reach of the River Cesar, equally distant from its confluence with Ayuma, and its fall into Magdalen.

5. RIO DE LA HACHA is the name of a little Province lying on the North-East of S. Martha: environed on two sides with the main Ocean, and on the third (which is that of the West) with a large and spacious Arm of the Sea, called Golfo de Venezuela: the extremities hereof North-west; called Cabo la Vela: on the North-east, Cabo di Cogni bocca.

It took this name from the Town and River of La Hacha, a small Town, consisting of no more than an hundred houses, but big enough to give name to so small a Province. Built on a little Hill about a mile from the Sea; the Haven inconvenient and exposed to the Northern winds, but the soil about very rich, fruitful of all such Plants as are brought from Spain; well stored with veins of Gold, excellent Salt-wiches, and some Gems of great worth and verue. Distant eight leagues from New Salamanca, and 18 leagues from the Cape la Vela: surprized and sacked by Sir Francis Drake, Anno 1595. 2 Rancheria, ria six leagues on the East of De la Hacha, inhabited for the most part by such as get their living by Pearl-fishing. 3 Tapia, five leagues from La Hacha, and almost as much from the Sea: the Fields whereof lying betwixt the Town and New Salamanca, were terribly wasted by the English, in the year aforesaid; because the Governour of New Salamanca, with whom they had contracted for 4000 Ducats not to burn that Town, would not stand to his bargain.

These Countries discovered by Columbus, and by him called Terra Firma, as before was said; were afterwards brought under the power of Spain, by two several men, employed in the subduing of their several parts; An 1508. To Didaco Niqueza was allotted the government & conquest of those parts hereof, which lie on the West of the Bay of the Araba, containing the Praefectures of Darien and Panama, by the name of Castella del Oro. And to Alfonso Ojeda, all that lay on the East of that Gulf, by the name of New Andalusia. But these two finished not the work, though they first began it: Enciso discovering further on the River of Darien, than Niqueza had done before him; and Balboa finding out the way to the South-Sea, where Panama and the best of their trading lieth, which neither of the other had thought upon. Both afterwards joyned into one Province, the Praefectures of S. Martha and Rio de la Hacha (when conquered and subdued by the Spaniards) being added to it. One of their last Kings which held out against the Spaniards, was called Abeica, who had his Palace on the top of a Tree (as most of his subjects had their houses;) from which when Francisco de Vasquez a Spanish Captain could by no other Rhetorick win him to descend, he laid his Axe to the Root, and began to fell it: which seen, the poor Prince was fain to come down, and compound both for his life and Palace at the will of his Enemies.

NOVA GRANADA.

NOVA GRANADA, or the New Realm of Granada, is bounded on the North, with Castella Aurea; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Venezuela. The Countries lying on the South, are not yet discovered, shut up with vast Hills, and impassable Mountains, except only in those parts which lie near the Sea, where the way lieth open to Pernu. Thus called by Gonsalvo Ximenez, the first Discoverer; who being a Native of Granada in Spain, gave this name unto it.

It is in length 130 leagues, and as much in breadth; reckoning Popayan for a part of it, though by some made a distinct government. So that we may divide the whole into these two parts, Granada specially so called, lying on the West, and 2 Popayana, lying towards Mare del Zur.

1. GRANADA, specially so called, hath an Air for the most part, well tempered betwixt heat and cold; with little difference (if any) betwixt Summer and Winter, and not much in the length and shortness of days. The Country full of Woods, but of great fertility, well stored with Corn and Pasturage, many Herds of Cattel; some veins of Gold and other Metals, and in that part hereof, which is called Tunia, great plenty of Emeralds: and amongst their Woods, that called Guajacum, Medicinable for the French disease, grows in great abundance. The people tall and strong of body, not very industrious, the greatest part of their time being spent in songs and dances. The Women of a white and more clear complexion than any of their neighbours, and more handsomely habited, apparelled in black, or party-coloured Mantles, girt about their middles; their hair tied up, and covered most an end with Chaplets intermixt with flowers, and artificially composed.

Rivers of note find not any, but those of S. Martha, and S. Magdalena, described before: nor any distinction of it into several Provinces, but that the names of Tunia, Bagota, Pancher, Colyma, and Musi, by which the Salvages were distinguished, when first known to the Spaniards; with reference to which the principal of their Towns are by some described:

Towns then of greatest note, 1 S. Foy de Bagota, but commonly S. Foy, the Metropolis of this new Realm, the See of an Archbishop, and the seat of the Governour. Built by Gonsalvo Ximenez de Quesada, at the foot of the Mountains, not far from the Lake of Guatavita, on the banks of which they used to sacrifice to their Idols. The Town inhabited by 600 Families of Spaniards, besides those of the Natives; and situate in the fourth degree of Northern Latitude. 2 S. Michael twelve leagues on the North of S. Foy, a well-traded Market. 3 Toycama, in the Territory of the Pancher, a barbarous and man-eating people, till reclaimed by the Spaniards; and Masters of the richest part of all the Country. The Town about 15 leagues from S. Foy, toward the North-East; and seated on the banks of Pati, a little River, which not far off is swallowed up in the body of Magdalen. 4 Tudela, is the Country of the Musi, and Colyma, two warlike Nations; situate on the banks of the River Zarbi, and made a Colony of the Spaniards at their first coming hither; but deserted by them not long after, for fear of the Salvages, though the want of Provisions was pretended. 5 Trinidad, on the same River, but somewhat lower, and more remote from the Salvages, by whom notwithstanding much annoyed; the fields thereof full of veins of Crystal, Emeralds, Adamants, and Chalcedonians. 6 La Palma, built by the Spaniards in the same Territory of the Musi and Colyma, An 1572. 7 Tunia so called according to the name of the Tribe, or Province, in which it is situate; built on the top of an high Hill, that it might serve for a Retreat and Fortrefs against the Salvages; now a well-traded Empery, and very wealthy, the Inhabitants being able to impress 280 Horse for present service. 8 Pampelma, 60 leagues from S. Foy, toward the North-East, rich in Mines of Gold, and Herds of Cattel. 9 Merida, on the North of Pompiana, the furthest Town of all this Province on the North-East towards Venezuela: As to S. John de Los Llanos, or S. John upon the Plains is in the South-East, 50 leagues from S. Foy, and seated in a corner full of veins of Gold.

2. POPAYANA lieth on the West of New Granada, strictly and specially so called; from which parted by the River Martha, which hath its original in this Country; on the North bounded with Nova Andalusia, or Carthagena; and with Mare del Zur upon the West. Extended in length from North to South 130 leagues at the least; and from the River to the Sea, betwixt 30 and 40.

The Country over-cloyed with rain, breeds but little Maize, less Wheat, and almost no Cattel; though in some places richer than it is in others. The people anciently Man-eaters; and as rude as any, now more industrious and affable than the other Americans; especially about Popayan, where the foyl is also better tempered than in other places. The Rivers of most note, beside that of S. Martha, which we have spoken of already; and some lesser streams which fall into it; are 1 Rio de S. Juan, 2 Rio de Cedros, 3 Rio de S. Jago; all falling into Mare del Zur.

Cities and Towns of greatest note, 1 Popayan, called by the name of the King hereof, when first known to the Spaniards; situate on a nameless but pleasant River, in the midst of a Plain, of great wealth, wealth, and healthy air, in two Degrees and 30 Minutes of Northern Latitude: the ordinary residence of the Governour, and See of a Bishop. The building fair unto the eye, but slight, excepting the Cathedral, and a Monastery of the Friars called Demeride, which are strong and lasting. 2 Antiochia, (or Santa Fides de Antiochia) on the borders of Nova Andalusia, 100 leagues distant from Popayan. Seated upon a little River which falls into the Martha, from which twelve leagues distant. 3 Caramanta on the Martha it self. 4 Patia in a pleasant Valley, on the banks of a small River, but of excellent water. 5 S. Anne in the Centred of Anserman, by which name it is sometimes called: Built on a little Hill betwixt two sweet Rivers, and compassed round about with a Grove of most pleasant fruits. 6 S. Jago de Arma, the chief Town of the Centred of Amphistiane in a Territory very rich in Gold, but otherwise unprovided of all manner of necessaries: Fifty leagues to the North-East of Popayan. 7 Cathage, in the Province of Quimbala, 22 leagues from S. Jago de Arma, seated in a Plain betwixt two Torrents, seven leagues from the River of S. Martha. 8 Cali, a league from that River, but on the banks of another, in the latitude of four degrees: neighboured by a vast and mighty Mountain, at whose foot it standeth: where built by Sebastian de Betalcazar, the first discoverer of this Country. 9 Bonaventure, on a Bay so called in the Southern Ocean: a small Town, but of great use for the conveyance of the Commodities of New Spain unto Popayan, and other Towns of this Province. 10 Timana, 80 leagues from Popayan towards the East, at the foot of that vast ridge of Mountains called the Andes; which hereabouts taking their beginning, extend as far South-wards as the Straits of Magellan. 11 S. Juan de Pasfo, situate in a pleasant Valley but one degree from the Aequator. 12 Sebastian de la Plata, so called of its Silver Mines in the South-East confines of the Province. 13 Almagra, on the sides of a plain, but barren Mountain. 14 Madrigal, by the Natives called Chapan Ghien; in a barren soyl, were not Gold, a supplement of all wants, which is there found in some abundance.

To this Province belong also some Islands in the Southern Ocean, that is to say, 1 The Isle of Palme, South of the Cape of Corrientes, so called from the abundance of Palms which are growing in it. 2 Gorgona, opposite to the mouth, or outlet of Rio de S. Juan, an Island of three leagues in compass; the Hills so high, the Vallies so extremely low, the Sun so little seen amongst them, and the Woods so dark, that some have likened it to Hell. Not much observable, but that it did afford a lurking place unto Francis Pizarro, in his attempts upon Peru, when repulsed from landing on that Coast. 3 Del Gallo, a small Island, nor a league in circuit, on the South of Gorgona.

This whole Country thus divided into two Presidencies, but both subordinate to the Juridical Resort in the City of S. Foy de Bagota; is indebted for its first Discovery to two several persons. Granada specially so called, was first discovered by Gonsalvo Ximenez de Quesada, employed therein by Ferdinand de Lugo, Admiral of the Canary Islands, An 1536, who passing up the River of Magdalen without molestation (more than the difficulties of the ways through Fens and Forrests) as far as the Centred of Bagota, was there encountered by that King, whom he easily vanquished: and wasting all his Territories, carried with him thence great quantity of Gold, Emeralds, and other Treasure. The residue of those Petit Princes which then governed in their several Tribes, either submitted to him without opposition, or else were vanquished at the first rising. Having discovered and subdued every several Province, and miserably murdered Sangipa the last King of Bagota, of whom he had made use in subduing the Panches, he caused it to be called The new Realm of Granada, for the reason formerly laid down: and summing up the spoils he had gotten in this easie war, he found them to amount to 18000 Emeralds, 191294 Pezos of the finest Gold, 35000 of a courser, and inferior alloy. In his return he heard the news of Sebastian de Betalcazar marching on the other side, of the River of S. Martha; who having at the same time discovered and subdued the Province of Popayana, was beating out his way towards the North-Sea, and from thence to Spain. This Betalcazar, being by Francisco Pizarro the Conquerour of Peru, made Governor of the Town and Province of Quito, and having secured all the Country to the very Sea; resolved to open a way homewards through those Regions, which lay betwixt his own Province, and Mare del Noort: And this he did resolve the rather, in regard that he had been informed, that a rich Country, full of Gold, was in that Tract possessed by Popayan and Columba, two Petit Princes, but yet the greatest in those parts. Encountred in his march by the Roycelets of Patia and Pasfo, he soon made them weary, and retire themselves into the Woods and impassable Mountains; and passing slowly on, came at last to Popayan. Where though the Salvages entertained him with some frequent skirmishes, yet they grew quieter by degrees; giving the Spaniards leave to possess themselves of their best Towns, and to build others in such places as they thought convenient. But this was after the first Conquest, according to the coming over of succeeding Colonies: The first Conquest being finished, An 1536. when the New Realm of Granada was subdued by Ximenez.

OF PERU.

PERU is bounded on the East, with that vast ridge of Mountains which they call the Andes; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the North with Popayan, an Appendix of the New Realm of Granada; on the South with Chile. So called from the River Peru, which being one of the first of note which the Spaniards met with in this Country, occasioned them to give that name to the whole.

It is in length from North to South 700 leagues, but the breadth not equal. In some places 100 leagues broad, in others 60. in the rest but 40. more or less according to the windings of the Seas and Mountains. Divided commonly into three parts, all of so different a nature from one another, as if they were far distant both in site and soyl. These parts the Plains, the Hill-Countries, and the Andes: the Plains extended on the Sea-shore, in all places level without Hills; the Andes, a continual ridge of Mountains without any Vallies; the Sierra, or Hill-Countries, composed of both. Each part stretched out from North to South, the whole length of the Country; the Plains from the Sea-shore to the Hill-Countries; for the most part ten leagues broad, in some places more; the Hill-Countries 20 leagues in breadth where narrowest, and as much the Andes. In the Plains it never raineth, on the Andes continually in a manner; in the Hill-Countries rain from September to April, after that fair weather. In the Hill-Countries the Summer beginneth in April, and endeth in September; in the Plains their Summer beginneth in October, and endeth in April. So that a man may travel from Summer to Winter in one day; be frozen in the morning at his setting forth, and scorched with heat before he come to his journeys end. Some other differences there are, as that the Andes are covered with Woods and Forrests, whereas the Hill-Countries are bare and naked; the Plains where there are store of Rivers, and the benefit of the Sea besides, sandy and dry; and in most places destitute both of Fruits and Corn; in some parts of the Hill-Countries where there are no Rivers, and rain but seldom, plenty of Roots, Maize, Fruits, and all other necessaries. In the Plains there never bloweth any but the Southerly winde, though it bring no rain with it; and in the Hills, winds from every coast, and of every nature, some bringing rain, some Snow, some claps of Thunders, and others fair weather at the heels of them. Inasmuch that it is observed, that such of the Inhabitants of the Plains as go up to the Sierra, or Mountains, do find such pains in the head and stomach, as fresh-water Souldiers when first Sea-sick.

Not to pursue these differences any further in the several parts, we will look upon the whole in gross: which we shall find but meanly furnished for the bigness, with those commodities which so large a Country might afford: inasmuch as many of the people live most on Roots, here being little Wheat, and not such quantities of Maize (the ordinary bred-grain of the Americans) as to serve their multitudes. Nor find I that the Cattel of Europe have been either brought hither in any great numbers, or are grown to any great increase. Instead of which they have in their Woods and Pastures infinite numbers of beasts somewhat like wilde Goats, (which they call Vicaguer) and great store of a kind of Sheep, by them called Pacos, profitable both for fleece and burden; as big as a small breed of Horses, but in taste as pleasing as our Mutton, and no less nourishing. A Creature so well acquainted with its own abilities, that when he findeth himself over-loaded, no blows, or violence shall make him move a foot forwards, till his load be lessened; and of so cheap a dyer, that he is content with very little, and sometimes passeth three whole dayes without any water. The Camels of these parts, are not much unlike them.

This as it is by some accounted for a Creature proper to this Country, only (though in that mistaken) so may it pass amongst the Rarities hereof: many of which it hath both in Beasts and Plants, and in inanimable bodies also. Amongst their Plants they have a fig-Tree, the North-part whereof looking towards the Mountains, bringeth forth its Fruits in the Summer only; the Southern part looking to the Sea, fruitful only in Winter. Some as deservedly do count the Coca for a wonder: the leaves whereof being dried, and formed into Lozenges, (or little Pellets) are exceeding useful in a journey. For melting in the mouth, they satisfy both hunger and thirst, and preserve a man in strength, and his spirits in vigour: and generally are esteemed of such foreign use, that it is thought that 100000 Baskets full of the Leaves of this Tree are sold yearly at the Mines of Potosi only, each of which at the Markers of Cusco would yield 12 d. or 18 d. a piece. Another Plant they tell us of, but I find no name for it, which if put into the hands of a sick person, will instantly discover whether he be like to live or die. For if on the pressing it in his hand he look merry and cheerful, it is an assured sign of his Recovery; as on the other side, if dead and troubled. Amongst their Beasts, besides those spoken of before, they reckon that which they call the Huanaco: of which it is observed that the Males stand Centinel on the Mountains, while the Females are feeding in the Vallies; and if they see any man coming towards them, they let out their throats, to give their Females notice of some danger near; whom when they come up to them, they put in the front of the Retreat, interposing their own bodies betwixt them and their enemy. Not want they Rarities of nature even in things inanimate: here being said to be a round Lake near the Mines of Potosi, whose water is so hot, though the Country be exceeding cold, that they who bathe themselves, are not able to endure the heats thereof, if they go but a little from the Banks: there being in the midst thereof a boiling of above twenty foot square. A Lake which never doth decrease, though they have drawn a great stream from it to serve their Metal-Mills.

More profitable, though less rare, those Metals, which those Mills are made for; and not less profitable, one one of those Vulgar Plants, I mean Tobacco, growing more abundantly here than in other Countries of America: for which cause, and the resemblance which it hath to Henbane, in form and quality, it is called the Henbane of Peru, by Gerrard and some others of our Modern Herbalists. A Plant, which though in some respect being moderately taken, it may be serviceable for Physick: yet besides the consumption of the purse, and impairing of our inward parts, the immoderate, vain, and phantastical abuse of this stinking weed, corrupteth the natural sweetness of the breath, stupifieth the brain; and indeed is so prejudicial to the general esteem of our Country-men, that one faith of them, Anglorum corpora, qui huic plantæ tantopere indulgent, in Barbarorum naturam degenerasse videntur. The two chief Vertues ascribed unto it (pardon me I beseech you this short digression) are, that it voideth Rheume, and is found to be a sovereign Antidote against Lues Venerea, that loathsome Disease of the French Pox. For this last, like enough it is, that so unclean a Disease may be helped with such an unsavoury Medicine. But for the second it may perhaps consist more in opinion, than truth or reality; the Rheume, which it is said to void, being no more than what it breedeth at the present. We may as well conclude, that Builed-Ale is good for the breaking of winde (which effect we find commonly to follow on the drinking of it) though indeed it be only the same winde which it self conveyed into the Stomach. But Tobacco is by few now taken as Medicinal; it is of late times growne a Good-fellow, and fallen from a Physician to a Complement. An humour which had never spread so far amongst us, if the same means of prevention had been used by the Christian Magistrates, as was by Morat Bassa among the Turks: who commanded a Pipe to be thrust through the Nose of a Turk whom he found taking Tobacco, and so to be carried in derision all about Constantinople. It is observed that the taking of Tobacco was first brought into England, by the Mariners of Sir Francis Drake, An. 1585. And that it hapned not unfitly in the way of an Antidote to that immoderate use of drinking, which our Low-Country Souldiers had brought out of the Netherlands much about that time, An. 1582. Before which time, the English of all Northern People were deemed to be most free from that Swinish Vice, wherein it is to be feared that they have much out-gone their Teachers, the Dutch. Certain it is, that it is taken so excessively by both these Nations, that I may justly say with a learned Fleming, Herba ejus, non dicam usui, sed abusu, non modo in Anglia, sed in Belgio: & alibi, insanum in modum jam adolevit.

But the greatest riches of this Country is most out of sight, hid in the Bowels of the earth, but found in those never-decaying Mines of Gold and Silver; more eminently abounding in this one Province than in all America. For instance whereof we may take the Silver Mines of Potosi, discovered in the year 1545, the fifth of which, payable into the Kings Exchequer, amounted in forty years to 11 millions of Reesers, every Pezco being valued at six shillings and six pence; and yet a third part of the whole was discharged of that payment. By this one we may guess somewhat of the rest, as by the proportion of one member, the dimensions of the whole body may be probably aimed at; unless the riches of these Mines be beyond conjecture; of which it is affirmed by some knowing men, that they yield in many places more Gold than Earth. Upon which ground it is conceived by Arias Montanus, and some other very learned men, that this Peru is that land of Ophir to which Solomon's Navy went for Gold; induced thereunto by that Text of the Chron. lib. 2. cap. 3. ver. 6. That the Gold was the Gold of Parvaim. A fancy not of so sandy a foundation, as many others of that kinde, if Peru had been the old name of this Country, and not newly given it by the Spaniards. By means whereof not only Spain, but all Europe also is better furnished with gold and silver, than ever formerly. For in the first Ages of the World our Ancestors the Britains (I must digress here once again) had no other money than Iron-rings, and Brass rings, which they used for instruments of Exchange; and in the Roman Provinces, we read that the most usual materials of their coyn, was both times Brass, and sometimes Leather. Corum forma publica percussim, as it is in Seneca. Of which last sort we find that Frederick the Emperour made use at the siege of Millain; and the English, in that me of the Barons Wars. And why not so? considering that no longer since then in the year 1574, the Spaniards being then reduced to some extremities, made money of Past board. But this hapned only in Cases of necessity, the two Metals of gold and silver having for many hundred years (though not in such abundance as in later times) been the chief Instruments of Exchange and Barter betwixt man and man, and questionless will so continue to the end of the World. I know Sir Thomas More in the second Book of his Utopia, preferreth Iron before Gold, because more necessary for all uses; Mo sine quo non magis quam sine igne atque aqua vivere Mortales queant: and that he giveth us there a Plot to bring gold and silver into contempt, telling us how the Utopians use to empty those Metals, in making Chamber-pots, and vessels of more unclean necessities; eating and drinking for the most part in glass or earth. He telleth us also how they make chains and fetters of Gold to hold in their rebellious slaves, and Malefactors; how they punish infamous persons by putting Gold Rings upon their Fingers, Jewels of Gold in their ears, and chains of Gold about their necks: how they adorn their little children with precious Jewels, which gayer, when they come to Age, and see them worn by none but such little children still, they use to cast away of their own accord; as with us our elder Boys leave off without constraint; their Babies, Cobnuts, and other Crepundia. He further telleth us how the Ambassadors of the Antemollis (a confederate State of the Utopians) coming amongst them richly and gloriously attired, were took for slaves, by reason of their Golden Chains, and the meanest of their Followers thought to be the Ambassadors: how the elder Boys derided the Strangers for wearing Jewels, as if they had been children still; and how the People laugh at their chains of Gold, as being too weak to shackle such sturdy Fellows. Now though it pleased that wise State to have any Gold or Silver at all amongst them, it was not (as he telleth us) out of any esteem which themselves had of it; but therewith to provide themselves of Foreign aids, and pay their Armies, when the necessities of their affairs, or other reason of State did require the same. How this device would sort with the humours of those People, whom Lucian antiently did Fable, and some of later times more really do fancy to have their dwelling in the Moon; I am not able able to say, as having hitherto had no commerce, nor correspondence with the Inhabitants thereof: though possibly I may endeavour it in the end of this Book, and find it to fort well enough with their condition. Certain I am, this sublimary World of ours will never brook it. And so I leave it, and look back again on the Mines of Peru: the extraordinary plenty of Gold and Silver, which those and the rest of the New World have furnished the Old World withal, being conceived by many knowing and judicious men, to be the cause of the dearth of all commodities at the present times, compared unto the cheapness of the times foregoing. For where much is, there greater prices will be given, than in other places. And yet there want not some that add also other causes, of the high prizes of our days: viz. Monopolies, Combinations of Merchants and Craftsmen; transportation of Grain, pleasure of great Personages, the excess of private men, and the like: but these last I rather take to be consequences, the first being indeed the principal. For (as that excellent Sir Henry Savil, hath it in the end of his notes on Tacitus) the excessive abundance of res viles viles viles, things which consist merely on the contentment of men, draweth necessarily res viles viles, those things which nature requireth, to an higher rate in the Market. Capta ab Augusto Alexandra (saith Orosius) Roma in tantum opibus ejus crevit, ut dupla majora quam antehac, rerum venalium pretia statuerentur. As for that question, whether of the two Kingdoms be happier, that which supplyeth it self with money by Traffick and the works of Art; or that which is supplied by Mines growing, as the gift of nature; I find it by this tale in part resolved. Two Merchants departing from Spain to get gold, touched upon part of Barbary, where the one buyeth Moors to dig and delve with; the other fraughtheth his vessel with sheep: and being coming to the Indies, the one finding Mines, set his slaves to work, and the other hapning in grassie ground, put his sheep to grazing. The Slaves grown cold and hungry, call for food and cloathing; which the Sheep-master by the increase of his stock had in great abundance; so that what the one got in gold with toil, charges and hazard both of life and health; he gladly gave unto the other in exchange or Bartery, for the continual supply of Victuals, Clothes, and other necessities for himself and his servants. In the end the Mines being exhausted, and all the money thence ailing exchanged with the Shepherd for such necessities as his wants required: home comes the Shepherd in great triumph, with abundance of wealth, his Companion bringing nothing with him but the Tale of his travels. But I dare not take upon me to determine this point. Only I add, that the English and the Hollanders by the benefit of their Manufactures and continual Traffick did in conclusion weary the late King of Spain, King Philip the second, and out-vied him (as it were) in wealth and treasure; notwithstanding his many Mines of Gold and Silver in Barbary, India, Mexico, Guinea, some in Spain and Italy, and these of Peruana which now we handle, and which have given occasion unto this Discourse, or Digression rather.

It is now time to take a view of the People also, affirmed to be (for the most part) of great simplicity; yet some of them (those especially which lie near the Equator) to be great dissemblers, and never to discover their conceptions freely. Ignorant of Letters, but of good courage in Wars, well skilled in managing such weapons as they had been used to, and fearless of death; the rather prompted to this last by an old opinion held amongst them, that in the other world they shall eat, and drink, and make love to Women. And therefore commonly at the Funeral of any great person, who was attended on in his life; they use to kill and bury with him one or more of his servants, to wait upon him after death. In the manner of their living, much like the Jews; but not in habit: conform therein to the other Salvages, but that those cover their upper parts with some decent garment, and leave the other Members bare. But this is only near the Equator; both Sexes elsewhere wearing Mantles to their very Heels. Habited in one fashion over all the Country, except the dressing of their heads, wherein scarce any one doth agree with another, but hath his fashion to himself. The Women less esteemed here than in other places, treated as Slaves, and sometimes cruelly beaten upon slight occasions: the men (as St. Paul saith of the ancient Gentiles) leaving the natural use of the woman, and burning in their lusts towards one another. For which, if God delivered them into the hands of the Spaniards, they received that recompence which was meet.

Rivers of most note 1. S. Jago, on the borders towards Popayana; a River of a violent course, and so great a depth, that it is 180 fathoms deep at the influx of it. 2. Tombez, opening into a fair and capacious Bay, over against the Isle of Puna, on the further side of the Equator; an Island of twelve Leagues in compass, and exceeding fruitful. 3. Guagaguil, of a longer course than any of the other two, and falling into Mare del Zur on the South of Tombez; over against the Isle of Lobos. No Island after this of note upon all this Coast. If any come in our way which runneth towards the East, we shall meet with them in the view of the several Provinces; and so we shall of the Hills or Mountains which are most considerable; the Andes having been already touched on. Take we now notice of the great Lake of Titicaca, in which twelve Rivers are reported to lose themselves; in compass 80 Leagues, and usually Navigable with ships and barks. The waters of it not so salt as those of the Sea, but so thick that no body can drink them; yet on the banks of it many habitations, as good as any in Peru. By a fair water course or River it passeth into a less Lake, which they call Aulaga; and thence most probably findeth a way into the Sea, or else is swallowed in the Bowels of that thirsty earth; but the first more likely.

It is divided commonly into three Juridical Resorts, viz. of 1. Quito, 2. Lima, and 3. Charcos; each having under it many several and subordinate Provinces, too many and of too small note to be here considered. We will therefore look upon the chief, and of greatest reckoning, 1. Quito, 2. Los Quijos, 3. Lima, 4. Cusco, 5. Charcos, and 6. Cello; three on the Sea, and the other three in the midlands; to which the Islands of it shall be joyned in the close of all.

1. QUITO is bounded on the North with Popayan; on the West with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the Province of Lima; and on the East, with that of Los Quijos. So named from Quito the chief Town and Province of the first division, Quito.

The Soil as fertile and as fit for the fruits of Europe, as any other in Peru: well stored with Cattel, especially the Pacos or Peruvian sheep; and plentifully furnished both with Fish and Powl. In many parts great store of Nitre, of which they make most approved good Gunpowder; and in some Rivers, especially that of S. Barbara, many veins of Gold. The people generally industrious, especially in making of Cloth of Cotton, equal almost to silks for fineness; of constitution strong and healthy, but given to lying, drinking and such other vices: with which they are so much in love, that though they are conceived to be apt of Learning, yet not without great difficulty brought to the Christian Faith; nor willingly reclaimed from their ancient Barbarisms. Extremely punished with the Pox, an hereditary disease amongst them; the very Girls and untouched Virgins infected with it, that neither Tobacco, Guajacomo, nor Sarsaparilla, all which this Country doth afford in a great abundance, is able to preserve them from it.

Towns of most observation in it, 1 Carangues, a large and sumptuous Palace of the ancient Kings, so named because situate in the Territory of the Carangues, a barbarous, bloody, and man-eating people; subdued by Guayanacapa, one of the mightiest of the Kings of Peru; from whom revolting, and withal killing many of his Ministers and Garrison-Souldiers, they were upon a second conquest brought to the banks of a great Lake, into which 20000 of them being killed, were thrown. The Lake from thenceforth called Yaguarcocha, or the Lake of blood. 2 Otavallu, another Palace of the Kings, but far inferior to the other; yet giving name unto the Cantred in which it standeth. 3 Quito, the chief of this Reour, and once the Regal seat of its proper Kings (till made subject by Guayanacapa before mentioned) the ruins of whose Palace are now remaining. By the Spaniards it is called S. Francisco, built on the declivity of an Hill, not above 30 minutes from the Equinoctial; well fortified, and as well furnished with Ammunition: inhabited by about 500 Spaniards besides the Natives. The streets whereof strait and broad; the buildings decent: the principal of which, the Cathedral Church, the Courts of Justice, and two Convents of Dominican, and Franciscan Friars. The Town and Territory much annoyed by a Flaming Mountain, or Volcano; which in the year 1560 cast out such abundance of cinders, that if a rain had not happened beyond expectation, had made great spoil upon the place. 4 Tacunga, fifteen Leagues from Quito; and 5 Rhibamba in the Territory of the Purusis, 40 Leagues from that; each of them honoured with another of those ancient Palaces. 6 Thomebamba neighboured by another of the Kings Palaces, but more magnificent than the former; situate in the Country of the Canares: amongst whom anciently the Women tilled the Land, and did all without doors: whilst the Men staid at home and spun, and attended housewifery. 7 Cuenca 64 Leagues from Quito, on another Road, situate in a Country full of Gold, Silver, Brass, Iron, and veins of Sulphur. 8 Loxa, sixteen Leagues Southwards of Cuenca, situate in the fifth degree of Southern Latitude, and in a sweet and pleasant Valley called Guixibamba, between two fine Riverets. The Citizens well furnished with Horse and Armour, but not otherwise wealthy. 9 Zamora, twenty Leagues on the East of Loxa; and 10 Jaen, 35 from that: both situate in the Province of Quachimayo, and both so called in reference to two Cities of those names in Spain: Then on the Sea-coasts, there are, 11 Portus Votus (Puerto Viejo as the Spaniards call it) not far from the Sea-side, but in so ill an Air, that it is not very much frequented. Said to be one of the first Towns of this Country possessed by the Spaniards, who digged up hereabouts the bones of a monstrous Giant; whose Cheek-teeth were four fingers broad. 12 Callantu the Port Town to Porto Viejo, from whence the Trade is driven betwixt Panama and Peru; the Town itself situate in a rich vein of Emeralds. 13 Guayaquil, or S. Jago de Guayaquil, called also Gulata; seated at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, near the influx of the River Guayaquil; a noted and much frequented Empory. 14 Castro, a Colony of Spaniards planted, An. 1568, in that part of this Country, which they call Provincia de los Esmeraldas, bordering on Popayan. 15 S. Michael, by the old Natives called Piura, the first Colony which the Spaniards planted in Peru, but otherwise of no estimation. 16 Payta, a small Town, but neighboured by the safest and most frequented Haven of all this Country; as guarded from the wind by the Cape of S. Helens on the North, and Punta Plurina on the South; two eminent Promontories. The Town burnt An. 1587. by Captain Cavendish. Who at the same time also pillaged the Isle of Puna, the most noted Island of this Trae, situate in the Bay of Tombez, as was said before. Fruitful of all things necessary to the life of man; Parats for pleasure, Sarsaparilla for his health. The people in preceeding times so stout and warlike, that they maintained a long War with those of Tombez, till in the end composed by the mediation of the King of Peru, to whom the King hereof (for a King it had) became an Homager, as since their embracing of the Gospel, to the Kings of Spain.

2. LOS QUIXOS, lieth on the East of Quito, and the West of El Dorado, (one of the Cantreds of Guayana, so called from its abundance of Gold:) little different in the nature of the soil and people from the Province of Quito; but that this is somewhat the more barren, and less stored with those rich metals which the Spaniards come for. The People have also a distinct tongue of their own, though they both understand and speak the Peruvian language.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Baeza, built in the year 1559. (which was within two years of the first discovery of this Region) by Giles Ramirez de Avila; 18 leagues from Quito towards the East: now the seat of the Governour. 2 Archidona, 20 leagues on the South-East of Baeza. 3 Avila, on the North of Archidona; so called with reference to Ramirez de Avila before-mentioned, or to a Town of that name in Spain. 4 Sevilla del Oro, a Colony of Spaniards, as the others are.

On the East of this Province lieth the Cantred of Camelans, inhabited by a blockish and ignorant People, and destitute of all things necessary for the comforts of life. Most mercilessly tormented, and cast to Dogs to be devoured, by Pizarro, because they could not fiew him the readiest way to some richer Country than their own; this being the most barren Region of that part of Peru, which they call La Sierra, or the Hill-Countries. More Eastwards yet in that part, which they call the Andes, lie the Cantreds of the Bracomori, commonly called Juan de Salinas, by the name of the first Discoverer of it: A Country not inferior inferior unto many for the quantity of Gold, superior to any for the pureness of it. Chief Towns of which, 1 Valladolid, 2 Loiola, by the Natives called Cumbinama. 3 S. Jago de las Montañas (or S. James of the Mountains) all Spanish Colonies; and all of the foundation of John de Salinas a Loiola, once the Pro-Prefect of the Province, by whom first thorowly subdued to the Crown of Spain.

3. LIMA, called also LOS REYES, is bounded on the North, with Quito; on the South, with Charcas; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Colloa and the Province of Cusco. So named from Lima or Los Reyes, the chief City of it. Extended from the sixth to the fifteenth Degree of Southern Latitude: or measuring it from the Promontory del Aguja North, to Arequipa on the South, it reacheth to 250 leagues. The Soil of the same nature with that of Quito, but more distributed into Vallies, and better peopled.

Places of most observation, 1 Miraflores in the valley of Zuma, 110 leagues on the North of Lima, and about five leagues distant from the Sea; on which it hath an Haven belonging to it, called Chencepen. The Town well seated, and inhabited by a wealthy people, made such by the abundance of Sugar-canes in the neighbouring Valley. 2 Truxillo, in the rich and flourishing Valley of Chimo, on the banks of a small, but pleasant River, and about two leagues from the Sea; where it hath a large, but unsafe Haven, which they call El Azzeife de Truxillo. The Town it self situate in the 7th Degree and 30 minutes of Southern Latitude: well built and rich, one of the principal of Peru; inhabited by 1500 Spaniards, besides the Natives, and beautified with four Convents of several Orders. 3 La Parilla, in the valley of the Santa, in which it standeth, and by which it is furnished with a safe and convenient Road for shipping; 20 leagues Southwards of Truxillo, and neighboured by rich Mines of silver, not long since discovered. 4 Arnedo, seated amongst Vineyards in the Valley of Chanca, ten leagues North of Lima. 5 Lima, by the Spaniards called Ciudad de los Reyes, or the City of Kings, situate in the Valley of Lima, the most fruitful part of all Peru, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees and an half. Built with much art, for all the chief streets answer to the Market-place; scarce any private house which hath not water conveyed into it from the River; environed round about with sweet fields, and most pleafant gardens. The founder of it Francisco Pizarro, who laid the first stone on Twelf-day (which the Spaniards call the Feast of Kings) whence it had the name, An. 1553. A Town of greater wealth than bigness, the Riches of Peru passing yearly thorow it; well housed, whether we respect the private, or publick Edifices: the Cathedral Church, made after the model of that of Sevil; the Convents of Religious Orders, the Courts of Justice, and the Palaces of the Archbishop and Vice-Roy, being all fair and goodly buildings; the Cathedral Church so well endowed, that the Revenues of the Archbishop do amount yearly to 30000 Ducats, besides what belongeth to the Canons and other Ministers. 6 Collao, the Haven-town to Lima, from which two leagues distant, a Town of 600 Families, for the most part Sea-men; every house having some Cellar in it for the stowage of Wine, Tobacco, Cables, Pitch, &c. for the use of Mariners; besides those, publick Ware-houses for the several Commodities which pass from Lima hither, or from hence to Lima. Unfortified till the year 1579. when sacked and spoyled of infinite Treasures by Sir Francis Drake; since that time strengthened by two Bulwarks, and a wall of Earth, with 30 pieces of Brass Ordnance planted on the Works. 7 Pachacama in the Valley so called, but four Leagues on the South of Lima: memorable for a Temple, in which Pizarro found above 900000 Ducats of Gold and Silver, not reckoning in those infinite treasures which the Souldiers had laid hands on before his coming. 8 Guarco, a Colony of 300 Spaniards, sixteen leagues on the South of Pachacama; environed with the best fields for Wheat in all Peru. 9 Valverde, in a Valley of the same name, so called from the perpetual greenness of it; best furnished with Vines, and those affording the best Wines of all this Country. A large Town consisting of 500 Spaniards, besides women and children; and other inhabitants of the Country: well traded, considering its distance from the Sea (Puerto Qomado the Haven to it, being six leagues off) and beautified with a fair Church, an Hospital, three Frieries, and the handsomest Women of these parts. Distant from Lima 35 leagues. 10 Castro Verreyna, in the Valley of Chocoleocha, 60 leagues from Lima, enriched with Mines of the purest Silver, digged out of a dry and barren hill, always covered with Snow; and standing in so sharp an air, that the Spanish women will not be delivered in it, but are carried further off to be brought to bed. From hence, as I conjecture, comes that vein of Tobacco, which our Good-fellows celebrate by the name of the right Peruvian. 11 Arequipa in the Valley of Quilca, 120 leagues from Lima, a pleasing and delightful Town; which situate at the foot of a flaming mountain, (from which in the year 1600. it received much harm) enjoyeth a fresh and temperate Air, and a Soil always flourishing. The silver of Plata and Potosi passeth thorow this Town, and is shipped for Panama, at an Haven belonging to it; situate on the mouth of the River Chile (upon which Arequipa standeth) but distant from the Town about 14 leagues. 12 Caxamalca, more within the land, but more towards the North, heretofore beautified with a Royal Palace of the Kings of Peru; memorable for the imprisonment and murder of Atabalipa, or Atahualpa, the last King of this Country, vanquished not far off by Francisco Pizarro. 13 Cachapoyas, in the Cantred so called, the best inhabited of any one Cantred of those parts, supposed to contain in it 30000 of the Natural Inhabitants, which pay duties to the King of Spain; and so esteemed for beautiful women, that from hence the Kings were anciently furnished with their Concubines. 14 Leon de Guanaco, (the addition given it from the Province in which it standeth) a Colony of Spaniards, rich, sweet, and very pleasantly seated: beautified heretofore with a most magnificent Palace of the Kings; as now with some Religious Houses, a Colledge of Jesuites, and the dwellings of many of the Nobility. Many other midland Towns there are, but of no great note, and therefore purposely passed over.

4. CUSCO comprehendeth, as the chief, all those several Provinces of the Hill-Countries, and the Andes, which lie Southwards of the Province or Cantred of Guanaco. Blest with a sweet and temperate belief amongst those Barbarians; and that belief drew many to take part with the Incas; by that aid victorious. This is supposed to have happened 400 years before the Spaniards put an end to this flourishing Kingdom, which was in the year 1533. Within which time they had brought all this Country, which we now call Peru, and many of the adjoining Provinces, under their Dominion. Their Kings were called Incas, as the Egyptians Pharaohs, the Tartars Cham; the word Inca signifying an Emperour, as Capa Inca (by which they sometimes called them) the only Emperours. Much revered by their Subjects, and so faithfully served, that never any of their Subjects were found guilty of Treason. Nor wanted they good Arts whereby to indeed their Subjects, and keep them out of leisure to foment new factions. The way of indemnity, by the fair and satisfactory distribution of the spoils gotten in the Wars, whether Lands, or Goods; all which they divided into three parts: allotting the first unto the service of the Gods; the second for the maintenance of the King, his Court, and Nobles; the third, to the relief of the common people. A distribution far more equal than that of Lycorgus, or the Lex Agraria of the Romans. But when there was no cause of Wars, they kept the people busy in the works of Magnificence; as building Palaces in every one of the Conquered Provinces, which served not only as Forts to assure the Conquest, but were employed as Stores-houses to lay up Provisions, distributed amongst the people in times of dearth. But that which was the work as of greater trouble, so of chiefest use, was the crossways they made over all the Countrey, the one upon the Mountains, and the other on the Plains, extending 500 leagues in length: a work to be preferred before any both of Rome, and Egypt. For they were forced to raise the ground in many places to the height of the Mountains, and lay the Mountains level with the flattest Plains; to cut through some Rocks, and underprop others that were ruinous; to make even such ways as were uneasy, and support the Precipices; and in the Plains to vanquish so many difficulties, as the uncertain foundation of a sandy Countrey must needs carry with it. Kept to these tasks, the people had no leisure to think of practices; yet well content to undergo them, in regard they saw it tended to the publick benefit. And for the Caciques (so they call the Nobility) the Inca did not only command them to reside in Cusco, to be assured of their persons, but caused them to lend their Children to be brought up there; that they might serve as Hofpages for the Fathers Loyalty. They ordered also that all such as repaired to Cusco the Imperial City, should be attired according to his own Countrey fashion; so to prevent those Leagues and Associations, which otherwise without any note, or observation, might be made amongst them. Many such Politic Institutions were by them devised, which had little of the Barbarous in them; and clearly shewed that there were other Nations which had Eyes in their Heads, besides those of China. What else concerns the Story of them, offereth it self in the following Catalogue of

The KINGS of PERU.

1. Mango-Capac, descended of the chief of the first seven Families, the first who laid the foundation of this puissant Monarchy; subdued the Cannaries, and built the City of Cusco.
2. Sinchi-Rocha, eldest Son of Mango; subdued a great part of Collao, as far as Chancay.
3. Longue-Tupangui, the Son of Sinchi, conquered Chiquito, Ayavire, the Canus, and the Inhabitants about Tiucaca; the first advancer of the service of Viracocha, from whom he did pretend to have many Vissis.
4. Mayta-Capac, the Son of Tupangui, subdued all the rest of Collao, the Provinces of Chuquiana, and a great part of the Charcos.
5. Capac Tupangui, or Tupangui II. the Son of Mayta, enlarged his Kingdom Westward unto Mare del Sur.
6. Rocha II. or Tucha Rocha, eldest Son of Tupangui the second, enlarged his Kingdom towards the North, by the conquest of the great Province of Antabuyallam, and many others.
7. Jahuar-Huacac, Son of Rocha the second, added to his Estates (by the valour of his brother Mayta) all the Southern parts from Arequipa to Tacaman. Deposed by the practice of his Son.
8. Viracocha, the Son of Huacac, having settled and enlarged his Empire; raised many great and stately Works, and amongst others many Aqueducts of great use but charge. For fear of him, Huancaballa, King of the Chuncus, with many thousands of his people, forsook their Countrey.
9. Pachacutec-Inca, Son of Viracocha, improved his Kingdom by the conquest of many Provinces lying towards the Andes, and South-sea; with that of Caxamalca Northwards.
10. Tupangui III. or Tucha Tupanchi, Son of Pachacutec, subdued the Conches, and Moxes, with some part of Chile.
11. Tupangui IV. or Tapac Tucha Tupanchi, Son of Tupangui the third, extended his Dominions as far as Quito.
12. Huayna-Capac, or Ghuaynacapa, Son of Tupangui the fourth, the most mighty Monarch of Peru, conquered the whole Province of Quito; and is supposed to be the founder of those two great Ruins spoken of before.
13. Huascar, or Ghuascar Inca, the eldest Son of Ghuaynacapa, after a reign of five years deposed and slain by his brother.
14. Atahualpa, or Atabaliba, the third Son of Ghuaynacapa, by the daughter and Heir of the King of Quito: into which Kingdom he succeeded by the Will of his Father. Commanded by his brother to do Homage for the Kingdom of Quito, he came upon him with such power, that he overcame him, and so gained the Kingdom. Vanquished afterwards by Pizarro at the battel of Caxamalca, he was taken Prisoner. And though he gave in ransom for his life and liberty, an house piled up on all sides with Gold and Silver, valued (as some say) at ten Millions of Crowns; yet they perfidiously slew him.

15. Mango.

15. Mango-Capac II. the second Son of Ghuaynacapa, substituted by Pizarro in his brothers Throne; after many vicissitudes of Fortune, was at last slain in the City of Cusco; and so the Kingdom of the Incas began and ended in a Prince of the same name; as it hapned formerly to some other Estates.

Let us next look upon the birth and fortune of that Pizarro, who subdued this most potent and flourishing Kingdom, and made it a Member of the Spanish Empire; and we shall finde that he was born at Tunigligo, a Village of Ycaur; and by the poor Whore his Mother, laid in the Church-porch, and so left to Gods providence: by whose direction (there being none found that would give him the breast) he was nourished for certain dayes, by sucking a Sow. At last one Gonsalves, a Souldier, acknowledged him for his Son, put him to Nurse, and when he was somewhat grown, set him to keep his Swine; some of which being strayed, the boy durst not for fear return home, but betook himself to his heels, ran unto Sevill, and there shipped himself for America; where he attended Alonso de Oieda in the discovery of the Countreys beyond the Gulf of Uraba; Balboa in his voyage to the South Sea; and Pedro de Avila in the conquest of Panama. Grown rich by these Adventures, he associated himself with Diego de Almagro, and Fernando Luques a rich Priest: who betwixt them raised 220 Souldiers, and in the year 1525, went to seek their Fortunes on those Southern Seas, which Balboa had before discovered. After divers repulses at his landing, and some hardship which he had endured, Pizarro at the length took some of the Inhabitants of Peru, of whom he learnt the wealth of the Countrey; and returning thereupon to Spain, obtained the Kings Commission for the conquest of it: excluding his Companions out of the Patent, but taking in Almagro of his own accord. Thus furnished he landeth in Peru again, at such time as the Wars grew hot betwixt the two brethren for the Kingdom: and taking part with the faction of Gonsalves, marched against Atabaliba; whom he met with in the Plains of Caxamalca, but rather prepared for a parley, than to fight a Battel. Pizarro taking this advantage, picked a quarrel with him, and suddenly charged upon him with his Horse and Ordnance, slaying his Guard without resistance; and coming near the Kings person (who was then carried on mens shoulders) pulled him down by the Cloaths, and took him prisoner. With him they took as much Gold as amounted to 80000 Castellans; and as much Silver as amounted to 7000 Markes (every Mark weighing eight ounces) of his household Plate; and in the spoil of Caxamalca, almost infinite riches. This, with the Kings ransom, came to so great a summe, that besides the fifth part which Pizarro sent to the Emperour, and that which Pizarro and his brethren kept unto themselves; every Footman had 7200 Ducats, and every Horseman twice as much, for their part of the spoil; besides what they had gotten in the way of plunder. How they dealt afterwards with the miserable King, their prisoner, hath been shewn already. Upon which Act, though they put many fair preferences, yet God declared that he was not pleased with their proceedings; few of the greatest undertakers going to the Grave in peace. For though Pizarro in reward of so great a service, was made the first Viceroy of Peru, and created Marquess of Anatilia: yet having put to death Almagro, his chief companion, who had raised a strong faction in that State; he was after slain at Lima, by some of that faction, in revenge of the death of their Commander. The like unfortunate end befell all the rest; his brother John slain by the Peruvians; Martin in Lima with himself; Ferdinando secretly made away in prison; and finally Gonsalves the fourth brother (with the Son of Almagro) severally executed for their Treasons and Insurrections, which they had acted in this Countrey against their King. So little joy doth wealth ill gotten bring along with it, to the owners thereof. And here I am to leave Pizarro, whose strange both fortunes and misfortunes in the course of his life, are to be paralleld onely with the like of Sinan, a great Bassa in the Court of Selimus the first; who being born of base Parentage, as he (being a Child) was sleeping in the shade, had his genitals bitten off by a Sow. The Turkish Officers which usually provided young boyes for the service of the Grand Seigneur, being in Epyrus (for that was Sinan's Countrey) and hearing of this so extraordinary an Eunuch, took him among others along with them to the Court: where under Mahomet the great, Bajazet the second, and his Son Selimus, he so exceedingly thrived, that he was made the chief Bassa of the Court; and so well deserved it, that he was accounted Selimus right hand, and was indeed the man, to whose valour especially, the Turks owe their Kingdom of Egypt; in which Kingdom then not fully settled, he was also slain.

But to return unto Peru, no question but the Forces and Revenues of it were exceeding great. For though we finde no particular multiers which they made of their men; or what great Armies they drew with them into the Field; yet by their great successes, and many victories, we may conclude them to be masters of great Bands of men, and skilful in the Arts of conduct. Nor can we otherwise conjecture at the greatness of their yearly Income, but by the greatness of their Treasure; so infinite and almost incredible, that all the Vessels of the Kings House, his Table and Kitchen, were of Gold and Silver; Statues of Giants in his Wardrobe, together with the resemblances in proportion and bigness, of all the Beasts, Birds, Trees, Plants, and Fishes, which were found in that Kingdom, of the purest Gold; Ropes, Budgers, Troughs, Chests, all of Gold, or Silver; Billets of Gold piled up together, as if they had been Billets of Wood, cut out for the fire; three houses full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver. All which, besides infinite other Treasures, fell into the hands of a few poor Spaniards: who grew so wanton hereupon, that they would give 1500 Crowns for an horse, 60 Crowns for a small Vessel of Wine, and 40 for a pair of Shooes: Consuming all upon their lusts, and sacrificing their Gods of Gold to their God the Belly.

belief amongst those Barbarians; and that belief drew many to take part with the Inga; by that aid victorious. This is supposed to have happened 400 years before the Spaniards put an end to this flourishing Kingdom, which was in the year 1533. Within which time they had brought all this Country, which we now call Peru, and many of the adjoining Provinces, under their Domination. Their Kings were called Inga, as the Egyptians Pharaohs, the Tartars Cham; the word Inga signifying an Emperour, as Capa Inga (by which they sometimes called them) the only Emperours. Much revered by their Subjects, and so faithfully served, that never any of their Subjects were found guilty of Treason. Nor wanted they good Arts whereby to indeed their Subjects, and keep them out of leisure to foment new factions. The way of indeedment, by the fair and satisfactory distribution of the spoils gotten in the Wars, whether Lands, or Goods; all which they divided into three parts: allotting the first unto the service of the Gods; the second for the maintenance of the King, his Court, and Nobles; the third, to the relief of the common people. A distribution far more equal than that of Lycorgus, or the Lex Agraria of the Romans. But when there was no cause of Wars, they kept the people busied in the works of Magnificence; as building Palaces in every one of the Conquered Provinces, which served not only as Forts to assure the Conquest, but were employed as Store-houses to lay up Provisions, distributed amongst the people in times of dearth. But that which was the work as of greater trouble, so of chiefest use, was the cross-ways they made over all the Country, the one upon the Mountains, and the other on the Plains, extending 500 leagues in length: a work to be preferred before any both of Rome, and Egypt. For they were forced to raise the ground in many places to the height of the Mountains, and lay the Mountains level with the flattest Plains; to cut through some Rocks, and underprop others that were ruinous; to make even such ways as were uneasy, and support the Precipices; and in the Plains to vanquish so many difficulties, as the uncertain foundation of a sandy Country must needs carry with it. Kept to these tasks, the people had no leisure to think of practices; yet well content to undergo them, in regard they saw it tended to the publick benefit. And for the Caciques (so they call the Nobility) the Inga did not only command them to reside in Cusco, to be assured of their persons, but caused them to lead their Children to be brought up there; that they might serve as Hofstages for the Fathers Loyalty. They ordered also that all such as repaired to Cusco the Imperial City, should be attired according to his own Country fashion; so to prevent those Leagues and Associations, which otherwise without any note, or observation, might be made amongst them. Many such Political Institutions were by them devised, which had little of the Barbarous in them; and clearly shewed that there were other Nations which had Eyes in their Heads, besides those of China. What else concerns the Story of them, offereth it self in the following Catalogue of

The KINGS of P E R U.

1. Mango-Capac, descended of the chief of the first seven-Families, the first who laid the foundation of this puissant Monarchy; subdued the Cannares, and built the City of Cusco.
2. Sinchi-Rocha, eldest Son of Mango; subdued a great part of Collao, as far as Chanacara.
3. Longue-Tupanguis, the Son of Sinchi, conquered Chiquito, Ayaviri, the Canas, and the Inhabitants about Tiisaca; the first advancer of the service of Viracocha, from whom he did pretend to have many Visits.
4. Mayta-Capac, the Son of Tupanguis, subdued all the rest of Collao, the Provinces of Chiquiapa, and a great part of the Charcas.
5. Capac Tupanguis, or Tupanguis II. the Son of Mayta, enlarged his Kingdom Westward unto Mare del Sur.
6. Rocha II. or Tucha Rocha, eldest Son of Tupanguis the second, enlarged his Kingdom towards the North, by the conquest of the great Province of Antabuyallam, and many others.
7. Tahuar-Huacac, Son of Rocha the second, added to his Estates (by the valour of his brother Mayta) all the Southern parts from Arequipa to Tacaman. Deposed by the practice of his Son.
8. Viracocha, the Son of Huacac, having settled and enlarged his Empire; raised many great and stately Works, and amongst others many Aqueducts of great use but charge. For fear of him, Hancoballia, King of the Chincas, with many thousands of his people, forsook their Country.
9. Pachacutec-Inca, Son of Viracocha, improved his Kingdom by the conquest of many Provinces lying towards the Andes, and South-sea; with that of Caxamalca Northwards.
10. Tupanguis III. or Tucha Tupanchi, Son of Pachacutec, subdued the Conches, and Moxes, with some part of Chile.
11. Tupanguis IV. or Tapac Inca Tupanchi, Son of Tupanguis the third, extended his Dominions as far as Quito.
12. Huayna-Capac, or Ghuaynacapac, Son of Tupanguis the fourth, the most mighty Monarch of Peru, conquered the whole Province of Quito; and is supposed to be the founder of those two great Roads spoken of before.
13. Huascar, or Ghuascar Inca, the eldest Son of Ghuaynacapac, after a reign of five years deposed and slain by his brother.
14. Ashualpa, or Ambaliba, the third Son of Ghuaynacapac, by the daughter and Heir of the King of Quito: into which Kingdom he succeeded by the Will of his Father. Commanded by his brother to do Homage for the Kingdom of Quito, he came upon him with such power, that he overcame him, and so gained the Kingdom. Vanquished afterwards by Pizarro at the battel of Caxamalca, he was taken Prisoner. And though he gave in ransom for his life and liberty, an house piled up on all sides with Gold and Silver, valued (as some say) at ten Millions of Crowns; yet they perfidiously slew him.

15. Mango.

15. Mango-Capac II. the second Son of Ghuaynacapac, substituted by Pizarro in his brothers Throne; after many vicissitudes of Fortune, was at last slain in the City of Cusco; and so the Kingdom of the *Inga*s began and ended in a Prince of the same name; as it hapned formerly to some other Estates.

Let us next look upon the birth and fortune of that Pizarro, who subdued this most potent and flourishing Kingdom, and made it a Member of the Spanish Empire; and we shall finde that he was born at Trulliglo, a Village of Navar; and by the poor Whore his Mother, laid in the Church-porch, and so left to Gods providence: by whose direction (there being none found that would give him the breast) he was nourished for certain dayes, by sucking a Sow. At last one Gonsalles, a Souldier, acknowledged him for his Son, put him to Nurse, and when he was somewhat grown, set him to keep his Swine; some of which being strayed, the boy durst not for fear return home, but betook himself to his heels, ran unto Sevill, and there shipped himself for America; where he attended Alonso de Oieda in the discovery of the Countreys beyond the Gulf of Uraba; Balboa in his voyage to the South Sea; and Pedro de Avila in the conquest of Panama. Grown rich by these Adventures, he associated himself with Diego de Almagro, and Fernando Loques a rich Priest: who betwixt them raised 220 Souldiers, and in the year 1525, went to seek their Fortunes on those Southern Seas, which Balboa had before discovered. After divers repulses at his landing, and some hardship which he had endured, Pizarro at the length took some of the Inhabitants of Peru, of whom he learnt the wealth of the Countrey; and returning thereupon to Spain, obtained the Kings Commission for the conquest of it: excluding his Companions out of the Patent, but taking in Almagro of his own accord. Thus furnished he landeth in Peru again, at such time as the Wars grew hot betwixt the two brethren for the Kingdom: and taking part with the faction of Guscar, marched against Ambaliba; whom he met with in the Plains of Caxamalca, but rather prepared for a parley, than to fight a Battel. Pizarro taking this advantage, picked a quarrel with him, and suddenly charged upon him with his Horse and Ordnance, slaying his Guard without resistance; and coming near the Kings person (who was then carried on mens shoulders) pulled him down by the Cloaths, and took him prisoner. With him they took as much Gold as amounted to 80000 Castellans; and as much Silver as amounted to 7000 Marks (every Mark weighing eight ounces) of his household Plate; and in the spoyle of Caxamalca, almost infinite riches. This, with the Kings ransom, came to so great a summe, that besides the fifth part which Pizarro sent to the Emperour, and that which Pizarro and his brethren kept unto themselves; every Footman had 7200 Ducats, and every Horseman twice as much, for their part of the spoyle; besides what they had gotten in the way of plunder. How they dealt afterwards with the miserable King, their prisoner, hath been shewn already. Upon which Act, though they put many fair pretences, yet God declared that he was not pleased with their proceedings; few of the greatest undertakers going to the Grave in peace. For though Pizarro in reward of so great a service, was made the first Viceroy of Peru, and created Marquess of Anathla: yet having put to death Almagro, his chief companion, who had raised a strong faction in that State; he was after slain at Lima, by some of that faction, in revenge of the death of their Commander. The like unfortunate end befell all the rest; his brother John slain by the Peruvians; Martin in Lima with himself; Ferdinando secretly made away in prison; and finally Gonsalles the fourth brother (with the Son of Almagro) severally executed for their Treasons and Insurrections, which they had acted in this Countrey against their King. So little joy doth wealth ill gotten bring along with it, to the owners thereof. And here I am to leave Pizarro, whose strange both fortunes and misfortunes in the course of his life, are to be paralleld onely with the like of Sinan, a great Bassa in the Court of Selimus the first; who being born of base Parentage, as he (being a Child) was sleeping in the shade, had his genitals bitten off by a Sow. The Turkish Officers which usually provided young boyes for the service of the Grand Signeur, being in Epyrus (for that was *Sinan*s Countrey) and hearing of this so extraordinary an Eunuch, took him among others along with them to the Court: where under Mahomet the great, Bajazet the second, and his Son Selimus, he so exceedingly thrived, that he was made the chief Bassa of the Court; and so well deserved it, that he was accounted Selimus right hand, and was indeed the man, to whose valour especially, the Turks owe their Kingdom of Egypt; in which Kingdom then not fully settled, he was also slain.

But to return unto Peru, no question but the Forces and Revenues of it were exceeding great. For though we finde no particular matters which they made of their men; or what great Armies they drew with them into the Field; yet by their great successes, and many victories, we may conclude them to be masters of great Bands of men, and skilful in the Arts of conduct. Nor can we otherwise conjecture at the greatness of their yearly Income, but by the greatness of their Treasure; so infinite and almost incredible, that all the Vessels of the Kings House, his Table and Kitchen, were of Gold and Silver; Statues of Giants in his Wardrobe, together with the resemblances in proportion and bigness, of all the Beasts, Birds, Trees, Plants, and Fishes, which were found in that Kingdom, of the purest Gold; Ropes, Budgets, Troughs, Chests, all of Gold, or Silver; Billers of Gold piled up together, as if they had been Billers of Wood, cut out for the fire; three houses full of pieces of Gold, and five full of Silver. All which, besides infinite other Treasures, fell into the hands of a few poor Spaniards: who grew so wanton hereupon, that they would give 1500 Crowns for an horse, 60 Crowns for a small Vessel of Wine, and 40 for a pair of Shooes: Consuming all upon their lusts, and sacrificing their Gods of Gold to their God the Belly.

CHILE.

CHILE is bounded on the North, with the Desert of Alacama, 90 Leagues in length, interposed betwixt it and Pern: on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the South, with the Straits of Magellan; and on the East as far as to Rio de la Plata, with the main Atlantick; the Countreys lying on the East, betwixt it and Paraguay, not well discovered.

This Countrey lyeth wholly beyond the Tropick of Capricorn, by consequence in the temperate Zone; extended in length from the borders of Pern, to the mouth of the Straits, 500 Leagues; but the breadth variable and uncertain. Called Chile, from the word Chil (which in more tongues than ours doth signifie as much as Cold) from the extrem coldness of the Aire and Clime; so vehement here in our Summer Solstice, that many times both the Horses and the Riders are frozen to death, and hardened like a piece of Marble.

The Soil hereof in the midland parts, Mountainous and unfruitful; towards the Sea-side, level, fertile, and watered with divers Rivers flowing from the Mountains: productive of Maize, Wheat, and most excellent Pasturage; plenty of Gold and Silver, abundance of Honey, store of Cattel, and Wine enough for the use of the people; the Vines brought hither out of Spain prospering here exceedingly, as do also all the Fruits and Plants, which are sent from thence into this Countrey. The people very tall and warlike, some of them of a Gigantine stature, affirmed (but I believe it not) to be eleven foot high; yet well conditioned with this greatness, where not much provoked. Their garments of the skins of Beasts, their Arms Bow and Arrows: white of complexion, but as hirsute and shaggy haired as the rest of the Salvages.

Rivers of note there are not any but what will fall within the view of its several Provinces: Divided commonly into 1 Chile specially so called, and 2 Magellanica.

1. CHILE specially so called, is bounded on the North, with the Desert of Alacama; on the South, with Magellanica; on the West, with Mare del Zur; and on the East, with some unknown Countreys, lying betwixt it and Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata; not above 20 Leagues in breadth, but in length 300. The reason of the name, together with the nature of the Soil and People, we have seen before.

Principal Rivers of this part, 1 Rio de Copayapo, giving name unto a Promontory near the influx of it, in the Northern borders of this Province. 2 Rio de Coquimbo, 3 La Ligua, 4 Topocalma, 5 Cacapo, 6 Canten; all falling into Mare del Zur; and besides these, a nameless, but more famous River, which in the day time runneth with a violent current, and in the night hath no water at all. The reason of it is, because this River having no constant Fountain, is both begun and continued by the Snow falling from the Mountains; which in the heat of the day melted into water, is precipitately carryed into the Sea; but congealed in the coldness of the night, yields no water at all, whereby the Channel becometh empty.

Places of most observation in it, 1 Gopiapo, giving name to a fertile Valley, in the most Northern tract hereof; and neighboured by a small, but commodious Haven. 2 Serena, a Colony of the Spaniards, on the Sea-side, not far from the influx of Rio de Coquimbo, on whose banks it is seated; where built by Baldivia the Conquerour and first Governour of this Province, An. 1544. The Territory round about it rich in Mines of Gold: the Town it self of 200 houses, but so well peopled, that at the landing of some of the English under Captain Drake, they presently sent out 300 Horse and 200 Foot to compell them back unto their Ships, which they did accordingly. 3 S. Jago, the chief of all this Province, (though not above 80 houses in it) because the Residence of the Governour, and the Courts of Justice; adorned with a Cathedral Church, and some Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Priests; situate in the 34 Degree of Southern Latitude, on the banks of the River Topocalma, at the mouth whereof is the Haven of Val paraíso, the best and most noted of this Countrey; out of which the English under Drake took a Spanish Ship, and therein 25000 Pezoes of the purest Gold, besides other Commodities. 4 Concepcion, 70 Leagues on the South of S. Jago, situate on the shores of a large and capacious Bay (by the Natives called Penco) by which and the mountains on all sides so strongly fenced, that the Governour, when distressed by the Salvages (as sometimes they are) retireth hither for safety. Well fortified in such places as are accessible, and garrisoned with 500 Souldiers, besides the Townsmen. Opposite hereunto lyeth the Isle of S. Mary, so near the shore, that it seems to have been rent from it by the force of the Sea; fruitful and very well provided of Swine and Poultry, but the people so in fear of the Spaniards dwelling in Concepcion, that they dare not kill or eat either, but by leave from them. 5 Auracón (so I think they call it) a strong Fortrefs in the Countrey of the Auracans, the most potent Nation of these parts; who weary of the Spanish yoke, revolted against Baldivia, overcame him in a set fight, and at last killed him: this piece being thereupon forsaken, and of no more use. 6 De los Confines, built by Baldivia in the borders of the Countrey of those Auracans, to serve for a defence to the Mines of Ongol near adjoining:

joining: distant from the Sea-shores about 18 Leagues, enlarged by Garcias de Mendoza, and by him called Villa Nueva de los Infantes. 7 Imperiale, in the 38 Degree and 40 Minutes of Southern Latitude; situate on the banks of the River Canten, an Episcopal See, and the best Fortrefs of the Spaniards in all this Province. Fortified and made a Colony of Spaniards in the year 1551. and by Baldivia called Al Imperiale, because they found an Eagle with two heads made in Wood, on the doors of their houses; a monument perhaps of some Germans, who had here been shipwrackt. A Town of so great wealth and power, before known to the Spaniards, that in a war betwixt them and the Auracans, spoken of before, they are said to have brought into the field 300000 men. 8 Villa Rica, another Colony of Spaniards, 16 leagues on the South-East of Imperiale, and 25 leagues from the shores of Mare del Zur. 9 Baldivia, the most noted Town of all these parts, situate in the Valley of Gnadalanguen, in the Latitude of 40 degrees, or thereabouts: adorned with a safe and capacious Haven, and neighboured by Mines of Gold of such infinite riches; that Baldivia (by whom built for defence of those Mines) received thence daily by the labour of each single workman, 25000 Crowns a man; and sometimes more. Sacked by the Salvages, An. 1598 since repaired by the Spaniards. 10 Osnoro, on the Banks of the Bay of Chiloe, (or Ancud, as the Salvages call it) situate in a barren soil, but well stored with Gold, and thought to be more populous than Baldivia it self. 11 Castro, the most Southern Town of all this Province, in the Latitude of 44. built in a large and fruitfull Island of the Bay of Ancud, said to be 50 leagues in length, but the breadth unequal; in some parts nine, in others not above two leagues. 12 S. Juan de la Frontera, on the further side of the Andes, towards Paraguay, or Rio de la Plata.

To this Province there belong also certain Islands lying on the Coasts and shores hereof. 1 S. Marter, spoken of before. 2 Mocha, upon the South of that, five leagues from the Continent, fruitful of Grain, and very good Pasturage; sufficient to maintain the Inhabitants of it, who being the descendants of those Americans, who fled hither to avoid the tyranny of the Spaniards, hitherto have made good their liberty against that Nation: of which so jealous, that they would not suffer the English under Drake and Cavendish to land amongst them, for fear they had been Spaniards, or some friends of theirs. 3 Castro, which we have spoken of already.

2. MAGELLANICA is bounded on the North with Chile, and the Province of Rio de la Plata; on the South, with Fretum Magellanicum, or the Straits of Magellan; on the West, with Mare del Zur; on the East, with Mare del Norte, or the main Atlantick. So called from Magellanus, by whom first discovered, of whom we shall speak more hereafter.

It is in length from the borders of Chile to the mouth of the Straits, 300 leagues in breadth: from one Sea to the other, where broadest, above 400 leagues; in some but 90 onely, and in others less, according as it draweth towards the point of the Pyramid. The inland parts of the Countrey not yet discovered: those on the Sea-side observed to be rocky and unfruitfull, exposed for the most part of the year to such bitter colds, that the Snow lyeth alwayes on the Mountains. The people said to be tall of stature, and some of them of a Gigantine bigness, reported to be ten, or eleven foot high; and by the Spaniards for that reason are called Patagons. Both great and less, sufficiently rude and barbarous, quite naked, and unfurnished of any houses, notwithstanding the rigour of the cold.

No houses doth imply no Towns, and therefore we must look for none in so rude a Countrey, as hath not hitherto conversed with more civil Nations. So that the most that we can do, is to Coast the shores, and see what names of Ports or Promontories we can finde therein. And first upon the Sea-coasts towards Mare del Zur, they place (beginning at the North, and so descending) 1 The Promontory called Cabo de las Islas. 2 The Port, or Haven of S. Stephen. 3 The Valley of Nuestra Señora, or our Ladies Valley. 4 The Promontory called Punta Delgado. 5 Porto de los Reyes. 6 Ancon Sinfalida, on the banks of a semi-circular Bay, the receptacle of many Rivers, and not a few Islands. 7 Cabo de la Victoria, or the Cape of Victory, situate betwixt that Bay and the mouth of the Straits; so called from the name of the ship in which some of Magellanes Souldiers did first compass the World. For Ferdinand Magellano a noble Portugal, and well skilled in Navigation, at the persuasion, or command of Charles the fifth, to whom (upon some discontents received in the Court of Emanuel King of Portugal) he had made offer of his service; undertook the finding out (if possible) a shorter cut to the Moluccos, than discovered formerly. In the year 1520. he began his Voyage, his Fleet consisting but of 5 ships, whereof that called the St. Antonio forsook him in some great displeasure, and returned to Spain, another of them being lost not long after in a storm, keeping along the Coast to the South of Rio de la Plata, about the end of October, fell upon the Cape of Virgins, at the very entrance of this Strait, which on the doubling of this Cape he was fallen upon: and by the end of November (not before) was fully clear of these Narrow Seas, since called Fretum Magellanicum, and entred into Mare del Zur. Having refreshed himself in a little Island called Juvaganava he passed unto that also, but not far from the Philippines, the Prince whereof called Hamabar he perswaded to become a Christian, baptized him by the name of Charles, and finally engaging in a quarrel of his against the King of Mantuan, or Mattan, an adjoining Island, where he was unfortunately slain, An. 1521. After his death Serran chief Pilot of the Navy, together with 70 of his men being treacherously slain by Hamabar, the other three ships departed with no more than 15 men aboard them, which put them to a necessity of burning one of their ships, that they might have men enough to make good the others; with these two Ships they came at last to the Moluccos, where being kindly entertained by the King of Tidore, they divided themselves; that called the Trinity, under Capt. Spinoza, designed for Panama in New Spain, from which driven back by contrary winds to the Isle of Tidore, was seized on, and spoiled by Antonio Brito a Captain, commanding there a small Navy of the King of Portugals. The other Ship, which by a happy omen was called Victoria, having Magellanica. having in her but 47 Spaniards, under the command of Sebastian del Cano, after a long and dangerous Voyage, wherein it was thought that he had failed at the least 14000 leagues, returned to Spain in safety, and brought the welcom news of their good success.

We use to say that Sir Francis Drake was the first that sayled round about the World, which may be true in a qualified sense; viz. that he was the first Captain, or man of note that achieved this enterprise, Magellanus perishing in the midst of it; and therefore is reported to have given for his device, a Globe, with this Motto, Tu primus circumdediti me. This navigation was begun, An. 1577. and in two years and an half with great vicissitude of fortune, finished; concerning which his famous Voyage, a Poet then living, directed to him this Epigram:

Drake pererrati novit quem terminus orbis,
Quemque simul mundi vidit iterque polus:
Si tacant homines, facient te sidera notum:
Sol nescit cumis non memor esse sui.

Drake, whom th' encompass'd Earth so fully knew,
And whom at once both Poles of Heaven did view:
Should men forget thee, Sol could not forbear
To chronicle his fellow Traveller.

This Fretum Magellanicum, these Magellan straits, are in the 52 degree; and are by M. John Davis, who professeth to know every Creek in them, thus described. "For 14 Leagues within the Cape of S. Mary, lyeth the first strait, where it ebbereth and floweth with a violent swiftness: the strait not being fully half a mile broad, and the first fall into it very dangerous and doubtfull. Three leagues this strait continueth, when it openeth into a Sea eight miles long, and as much broad; beyond which, lyeth the second strait, right West-South-west from the first; a perilous and unpleasant passage, three leagues long, and a mile in breadth. This strait openeth it self into another Sea, which is extended even to the Cape of Victory; where is the strait properly called the strait of Magellan; a place of that nature, that which way soever a man bend his course, he shall be sure to have the wind against him. The length hereof is 40 leagues; the breadth in some places two leagues over, in others not fully half a mile. The Channel in depth 200 Fathoms, so no hope of Anchorage, the course of the water full of turnings and changings; withall so violent, that when a Ship is once entred, there is no returning. On both sides of it are high Mountains continually covered with snow; from which proceed those counter-winds, which beat with equal fury on all parts thereof. A place assuredly not pleasing to view, and very hazardous to pass. So far, and to this purpose M. Davis.

But to proceed, the way thus opened, was travelled not long after, An. 1525. by Garcias de Loyasa; next in the year 1534. by Simon de Alcarazo, and four years after by three ships of the B. shop of Placenza in Spain; but none of them had the hap or courage to adventure thorow; till undertaken and performed by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1577. after which it grew more familiar amongst the Seamen. However, we are so much debtors to the attempts of others, as that we owe to them the most part of the names of those Bays and Promontories, which they discovered in the search: though many of them since new named by the English, and Hollanders. Those of most note, proceeding from Cabo de la Vittoria, 1 Cabo de Quade. 2 Cape Gallant. 3 Cordes Bay. 4 Cape Froward, being the very point or Comes of this great Pyr. mis. 5 Porto Famine. 6 A little Isle called Elizabeths Island, and at the exit of the Strait into Mare del Noirt, the Cape of Virgins. Then bending Northward toward the great River of Plata, we find upon the main Ocean, 1 Rio de la Cruz, neighboured by a Promontory called Cabo de las Barreras; where Magellanus staid all September, and the greatest part of October, in expectation of an opportunity to discover further. 2 The Bay of S. Julian, out of which he set sayl for this adventure, about the later end of August, leaving there two of his companions condemned of mutiny. 3 The Port of Desire. 4 A large Promontory called the Cape of S. George. 5 The out-lets of a fair River, named Rio de los Camerones. 6 A goodly Haven entituled Puerto de los Leones. 7 The Cape called Punta de tierra plana. 8 The Bay of Amegada. 9 The Promontory called the Cape of S. Andrews. And 10 the River of S. Anne, beyond which lieth the Province of the River of Plata. This is the most that I can say touching Mag. Illica, as to the Havens, Rivers, Points and Promontories; and this is nothing (as we see) but a Nomenclator. It must be better peopled and more discovered, before it can afford discourse of more variety. All we can adde, is that the passage back again from Mare del Zur to the Atlantick, hath not been found so safe and easie, as from the main Atlantick unto Mare del Zur. Attempted first by Ladrillero a Spaniard, at the command of Garcia de Mendoza, Governour of Chile, and attempted onely performed not long after the Voyage of Sir Francis Drake, by D. Pedro Sarmiento, employed therein by Francis de Toledo, Viceroy of Peru, with much difficulty, and no less danger; so much, that few have since endeavoured to return that way.

As for the fortunes and affairs of the Province of Chile, to which we have made this an Appendix, we are to understand that it was first discovered by Almagro de Alvarado, one of Pizarro's chief friends and associates. But he having other designs in his head about Peru, which he intended for himself, and to out Pizarro, did discover it only: the conquest of it being reserved for Baldivia, whom Pizarro, on the settling of his affairs by the death of Almagro, had employed in that action. He going souldier-like to work, not only did subdue the people; but as he gained ground, built some Fortresses, or planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. This done about the year 1544. his ill luck was to meet with a more stubborn and and untractable people, than either Cortez or Pizarro had done before him; who quickly weary of the yoke, besieged one of his Forts, encountred Baldivia himself coming with too small a power to relieve his people, vanquished and slew him in the field. Some adde that they poured Gold into his throat (as the Parthians are reported to have done to Craesus) bidding him satiare himself with that which he so much thirsted. After this blow given in the year 1551. the Salvages recovered the rich Vallies of Avance, Tucapel, and Purene; which they keep from them till this day: The Towns of Los Confines, and Villa Rica, both on the borders of those Vallies, then deserted also. Nor staid they there, though they took time to breathe a little. For in the year 1599. (having provided themselves of 200 Corslets, and seventy Muskets) they brake out again; surprized and sacked the Town of Baldivia; forced Imperiale after a whole years siege, to surrender without any conditions; and in the year 1604. took Osorno by famine. Of thirteen Cities, which the Spaniards had possessed amongst them, they had taken nine; some of them since recovered, but the most demolished. As ill it thrived with them in Magellanica, where Pedro de Sarmiento undertook the planting of two Colonies, to command those Streits, An. 1584. The one he ferled near the mouth of the Strait, which he called by the name of Nombre de Jesus, and left therein 150 of his men; the other he intended on the narrowest place of the Strait, to be called Ciudad del Rey Philip, which he resolved to fortifie, and plant with Ordnance. But winter coming on, he left there others of his men, promising to relive them shortly with all things necessary. But such as was his unhappy fate, that after many shipwracks and disappointments which befell unto him, in the pursuit of his design; he was at last taken by the English, under the command of Sir Walter Rawleigh, who was there in person: and his two Colonies, for want of timely succours, either starved at home, or eaten by the Salvages, as they ranged the Countrey.

And so much for CHILE.

OF PARAGUAY.

PARAGUAY is bounded on the South, with Magellanica; on the East, with the main Atlantick; on the North, with Brasil; On the West, with some unknown Countreys betwixt it and Chile. So called from the River Paraguay (one of the greatest of the world) which runneth through it: the River and the Province both by the Spaniards called Rio de la Plata, from the great store of Silver they expected from it.

The Countrey (for so much as hath been discovered) is said to be of a fruitful Soil; capable of Wheat and other of the Fruits of Europe; which thrive here exceedingly: nor do the Cattle increase less which were brought from Spain, both Kine and Horses multiplying in a wonderful manner. Well stored with Sugar-Canes, and not unfurnished with Mines, both of Brass, and Iron; some veins of Gold and Silver, and great plenty of Amethysts. Of Stags great plenty, and of Monkeys almost infinite numbers; not to say any thing of Lyons, Tygers, and such hurtful Creatures, of which a few would be thought too many. Of the people there is nothing said, but what hath been before observed of the other Salvages.

Chief Rivers of it, 1 De la Plata, whose course we have described already. 2 Rio de Buenos Ayres, so called from the chief Town by which it runneth. 3 Zarcavanna, which riseth in the Countrey of the Diagnitas, and falling into a Lake at the end of his course, doth from thence pass into the body of De la Plata. 4 Estero, which rising in the Valley of Chalacqui, and passing through two great Lakes, meets with 5 the Bermelo, and both together fall into De la Plata, near the Town of St. Foy. 6 Pilcomayo, which hath its Fountain near the Mines of Potosi, in the Province of Charcos; but his fall in the same River with those before. Then on the North-side of that River, there is 7 that of St. Salvador, or St. Salvador, as the Spaniards call it; 8 Rio Negro, or the Black River, of a longer course; but buried in the end, as the other is, in the deeps of La Plata. 9 Tiquana, and 10 several others, whose united streams make the great River Parana, the second River of esteem in all this Countrey: But swallowed in that of Plata. Besides these 11 Rio de St. Martin, and 12 Rio Grande, falling into the Ocean.

It comprehendeth the three Provinces of 1 Rio de la Plata, 2 Tucuman, and 3 La Cruz de Sierra. The rest not conquered by the Spaniard, or not well discovered, cannot be properly reduced under any Method.

1. RIO DE LA PLATA, or the Province of De la Plata, lieth upon both sides of that River; ascending many leagues up the water, but not extended much upon either side. The reason of the name, the quality of the Soil and People we have seen before.

Chief Towns hereof 1 Buenos Ayres, or Nuestra Señora de Buenos Ayres, by others called Ciudad de la Trinidad, seated on the Southern bank of the River of Plata, where built by Pedro de Mendoza, Anno 1535. Deserted by the Inhabitants, and again new-peopled by Cabeza de Vacca, Anno 1542. It was afterwards again abandoned; and finally in the year 1582. re-edified and planted with a new Colony. Situate on the rising of a little Hill, in the 34 degree and 45 minutes of the Southern Latitude, and about 64 leagues from the mouth of the River; fortified with a Mud-Wall, and a little Castle, with some Pieces of Ordnance; yet neither large, nor much frequented, containing but 200 Inhabitants. 2 St. Fe, or St. Fidei, 50 leagues up the River from Buenos Ayres, on the same side of the water, near the confluence of it with the River Estero: of the same bigness as the other, but somewhat richer; the people here being given to Cloathing, which Manufacture they exchange with the Brasilians for Sugar, Rice, and other necessary Commodities. 3 Nuestra Señora del Assumption, but commonly Assumption onely, higher up the River, from the mouth whereof 300 leagues distant: situate in the Latitude of 25. and almost in the midst betwixt Peru and Brasil; well built, and very well frequented, as the chief of the whole Countrey. Inhabited by three sorts of men, first natural Spaniards, or which here are accounted 400 Families; 2 The Mestizos, begotten by the Spaniard upon the Natives; and 3 Mulatto, born of the Spaniards and the Negroes; of which two last here are thought to be many thousands. Not far off is a great Lake, called Tupnam, in the midst whereof an huge Rock, above 100 Fathom high above the water. 4 Ciudad Real, by the Spaniards called also Ontiveros, by the Natives Guayra, 80 leagues North from the Town of Assumption; situate on the banks of the River Parana, in a fruitful Soil, but a sickly Air; for which cause, and the frequent Insurrections of the Salvages, but meanly peopled. 5 St. Anne, on the banks of the same River Parana; 6 St. Salvador, on a River of the same name. Besides these, there are up the River above Assumption, three noted Ports. 7 Puerto de Guaybiano. 8 Puerto de la Candelaria, and 9 Puerto de los Reyes; but whether Towns, or onely Havens on that River for dispersing and bartering their Commodities, I am not able to say. The last save one memorable for the defeat of John de Ayolas, and the death of 80 of his men, by the hands of the Salvages.

2. TUCU-

2. TUCUMAN lieth on the West of Rio de la Plata, extending towards the Confines of Chile, Tucuman through which they make their way unto Mare del Zur, as through the Province of Rio de la Plata: unto Mare del Norte the exact bounds hereof to the North and South, not yet resolved on.

The Countrey, for so much hereof as lieth towards Chile, well manured and fruitful; that towards Magellanica, barren, untilld, and not well discovered, no veins of Gold, or Silver in it, though situate in a temperate and agreeable Air. Watered by the two Rivers of 1 Salado, so called from the brackishness and saltiness of it; and 2 Del Estero, spoken of before, so named, because sometimes it breaketh out of his banks. The Inhabitants now civilized both in manners and habit, in both which they conform to the Garb of the Spaniards.

Chief Towns hereof 1 St. Jago del Estero, on the banks of that River, by the natural Inhabitants called Varco: the principal of that small Province, honoured with a Bishops See, and the seat of the Governour; and distant about 180 leagues from Buenos Ayres. 2 St. Michael de Tucuman, seated at the foot of a Rocky Mountain, but near a very fruitful soil, both for Corn and Pasturage, distant 28 leagues from St. Jago. 3 Talavera, or Nuestra Señora de Talavera, but by the Natives called Especo; situate on the River Salado, before mentioned, in a fruitful Soil, and inhabited by an industrious people, grown wealthy by their Manufactures of Cotton-wools, which grow hereabouts in great abundance: with which they drive a great trade at the Mines of Potosi, from hence distant but 140 leagues. 4 Cordoba, in a convenient place for trade, as being equally distant from St. Juan de la Frontera, in the Province of Chile; and St. Foy, in Rio de la Plata; 50 leagues from each; and seated in a Road from Peru unto Buenos Ayres; much travelled consequently by those who go from Peru to Brasil, or Spain. 5 New London, and 6 New Cordoba, built at such time as Gaspar de Mendoza, Son of the Marquess of Cannete, and Vice-Roy of Peru, was Governour of this Province: but both abandoned not long after. Besides these, 7 Morata, 8 Chocimoca, 9 Sococha, and 10 Calabina; Townships belonging to the Natives.

3. LA CRUZ DE SIERRA, is the name of a little Territory lying towards Peru, on the North of the River Guapay, and in the Countrey of the Chiquitos and Chiriguanaes, two Tribes of the Salvages. By some accounted to Peru, because under the Jurisdiction of Charcos: but so far distant from the nearest bounds of that Province (100 Spanish leagues at least) that I think fitter to account it to the Province of Paraguay; betwixt the banks of which River and that of Guapay it is wholly seated.

The Soil abundantly productive of Maize and Wines, plenty of moist sorts of American fruits, which I can give no English name to; a kind of Palm, of whose trunk they make great store of meal, of good taste and nourishment. But neither Soil nor Air agreeable to the fruits of Europe, which ripen slowly, and soon die. So destitute of Rivers, that the Inhabitants were fain to make use of Rain-water, preserved in pits: the cause of no small wants, and of many great murders, the people either dying for thirst, or killing one another for some water to quench it.

Chief Towns hereof, 1 Sancta Cruz, situate at the foot of a great Mountain, whence the name of the Province; but situate in an open field, enlarging it self into many Plains, and thirty Vallies: neighboured by a Brook, or Torrent breaking from the Rocks; which four leagues from the Town is become a Pond, and plentifully doth supply the Town with Fish. 2 Baranca, 60 leagues from the Mines of Potosi. 3 Tomina. 4 Lagunilla, and 5 Tarixa; three Forts erected for defence of this Province against the incursions and Alarms of the Chiriguanaes. 6 Nezva Rioja, once a Colony of the Spaniards, but sacked and dispeopled by the Chiriguanaes, when the Count of Nezva was Vice-Roy of Peru: at what time Nusso de Chaves, who in the year 1548. first discovered those parts, was treacherously slain by one of the Salvages.

The principal Nations of this Countrey, when first known to the Spaniards, were the Querandies, Timbues, and Carcates, the Chanes, Chiminci, Guaranies, the Guayacurves, Cacoves, Guaxarapi, &c. on both sides of the River of Plata: the Tucumanes, Juries, and Diagnitas, in the Centred of Tucuman; more Northward, where the Spaniards have as yet no hold, the Chunesses, Xagueffes, Xicoaes, and the Xarayer, great and powerfull Nations, hitherto unconquered. The first discovery of this Countrey ascribed to John Dias de Solis, a Spanish adventurer; who in the year 1515. passing up the River to the Latitude of 34 Degrees, and 40 minutes, and unadvisedly landing with too small a power; was there unfortunately slain. The design after prosecuted by Sebastian Cabot, Anno 1526. who sailed against the stream as high as the River Parana: at the reception of which, the great River called till then by the name of Paraguay, begins to be called De la Plata. Here built he the Fortresses called Fort Cabot; and 30 leagues more up the River, that called St. Anne, (both long since ruined) where Diego Garcia a Portugall found him, in the year next following. In the year 1535. the business was resumed by Pedro de Mendoza, who built the Town of Buenos Ayres; and sent John de Ayolas to discover Northwards; of whose unhappy end we have heard before. Nor fully settled till the year 1540. when Alvares Nunez, commonly called Cabeza de Vacca, made a more full discovery of it, and planted Colonies of Spaniards in convenient places. Nothing since done for the further planting of the Countrey, though some places have been marked out for new Plantations; here being little Gold and Silver, and consequently not much temptation to draw on the Spaniards to the work.

And so much for PARAGUAY.

O F B R A S I L.

BRASIL is bounded on the East, with Mare del Noort, or the main Atlantick; on the West, with some undiscovered Countreys, lying betwixt it and the Andes; on the North, with Guiana, from which parted by the great River Maragnon; and on the South, with Paraguay, or the Province of Rio de la Plata. The reason of the name I finde not, except it came from the abundance of that Wood called Brasil-wood, which was found amongst them; as the famous Isle of Cyprus, from its plenty of Cypresses.

It reacheth from the 29 to the 39 Degree of Southern Latitude; or measuring it by miles, it is said to be 1500 miles from North to South, and 500 miles in breadth from the Sea to the Andes; which mult be understood with reference to the whole extent of it; for otherwise all that which is possessed by the Portugals under the name of Brasil, is so short of taking up all the breadth hereof, that they possess nothing but the Sea-coasts, and some few leagues (comparatively) within the Land; the greatest part of it being so far from being conquered, that it hath not hitherto been discovered.

The Countrey full of Mountains, Rivers, and Forests, diversified into Hills and Plains always pleasant and green. The air for the most part found and wholesome, by reason of the fresh winds which do reign amongst them; there being all along the Coasts certain quick winds rising from the South, about 2 hours before Noon, which do much benefit the Inhabitants: yet in regard it is somewhat moist, it is held to be more agreeable to old men than to young. The soil in most parts very fruitful, were it not cloyed with too much rain; but howsoever liberally provided of Sugar-Canes, (no one Countrey more) for refining of which they have their Ingenios (as they call them) or Sugar-houses in most parts of the Countrey; in which they entertain many thousand slaves, brought hither yearly from Guinea, and Congo, and other maritime parts of Africk. A trade in which the Portugals are much delighted, and I cannot blame them; there being few years, in each of which they bring not out of Brasil to Portugal, 150000 Arrobes of Sugar, every Arrobe containing 25 Bushels of our English measure. Here is also infinite quantities of that red wood used in dying Cloath, which we commonly call Brasil-wood; (but whether the Wood took that name from the Countrey, or the Countrey rather from the Wood, I determine not:) The Trees whereof are of that incredible greatness, that whole Families live on an Arm of one of them, every Tree being as populous as the most of our Villages. In other Commodities common to them with the other Americans, we need not give particular instance.

Amongst the Rarities hereof, are reckoned 1 the Plant, called Copiba, the bark of which being cut doth send out a Balm, the soveraign vertue whereof is so well known to the very beasts, that being bit by venomous Serpents, they resort unto it for their cure. 2 The Herb called Sentida, or Viva, which roughly touched will close the leaves, and not open them again till the man that had offended it be gone out of sight. 3 A kinde of Wheat in the Valley near unto S. Sebastian, which is continually growing, and alwayes ripe; or never wholly ripe, because alwayes growing: for when one ear doth grain, another doth bloom; when one is ripe and yellow, another is green. 4 The Ox-fish, with eyes and eye-lids, two arms a cubit long, and at each an hand with five fingers and nails, as in a man; under the arms two teats, inwards like a Cow, in every Female. 5 A Creature found of late about the Bay of All-Saints, which had the face of an Ape, the foot of a Lion, and all the rest of a man; of such a terrible aspect, that the Soldier who shot him fell down dead: but this I rather look on as an aberration of Nature, than a rarity in her. 6 Beasts of such strange shapes, and such several kinds, that it may be said of Brasil, as once of Africk, Semper aliquid apportat novi; every day some new object of Admiration.

The people here are endowed with a pretty understanding; as may seem by him, who tartly blamed the covetousness of the Spanish, for coming from the other end of the World to dig for Gold; and holding up a wedge of Gold, cried out, Behold the God of the Christians! But in most places they are barbarous, the men and women go stark naked, and on high Festival days hang Jewels in their lips: these Festival days are when a company of good neighbours come together to be merry, over the roasted body of a fat man; whom they cut in collops, called Boucon, and eat with great greediness, and much delectation. They have two vile qualities, as being mindfull of injuries, and forgetfull of benefits. The men cruel without measure, and the women infinitely lascivious. They cannot pronounce the Letters L. F. R. The reason of which one being demanded, made answer; because they had amongst them neither Laws, Faith, nor Rulers. They are able Swimmers, as well women as men; and will stay under water an hour together. Women in travel are here delivered without any great pain, and presently go about their business, belonging to good house-wives: The good man (according to the fashion of our kinder sorts of Husband in England, who are said to breed their Wives Children) being sick in their stead, and keeping their bed; so far that he hath broaths made him, is visited by his Gossips, or Neighbours, and hath Junkets sent to comfort him. And amongst these there are some Rarities, if not Monstrosities in nature: it being said of those which live towards the Andes, that they are hairy all over like beasts, such as Orson is fained to have been in the old Romance; and probably so ingendred also; that the Guaymutes disbowel

Women

Women with Child, and roast the Children; and finally that the Salvage Nation of Cambuchiana have their Paps almost down unto their knees, which they tie about their waste when they run, or go faster than ordinary.

Rivers of note I find not any till I come to Maragnon, though that a Boundary rather betwixt this and Guiana, than proper unto this alone. If any chance to come in our way, as we cross the Countrey, we shall not pass them over without some remembrance. And so proceed we to the division of the Countrey, not into Provinces, or Nations, as in other places, but into Prefectures, or Captainships as the Portugals call them. Of which there are 13 in all, which we shall severally touch on as we trace the Coast, from the Province of Rio de la Plata, unto that of Guiana; that is to say,

1. The Captainship of St. VINCENT bordering on Rio de la Plata, inhabited by the most civil people of all Brasil. Chief Towns whereof 1 Santos, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, capable of good ships of burden, but distant from the Main three leagues. A Town of no more than 120 houses, yet the best of this Prefecture; beautified with a Parish Church, and two Convents of Fryers. Taken and held two moneths by Sir Tho. Cavendish, An. 1591. since that environed with a Wall, and fortified with two Castles. 2 St. Vincents better built, but not so well fitted with an Haven; of about 70 houses, and 100 Inhabitants. 3 Itange, and 4 Cananea, two open Burroughs, but capable of lesser Vessels. 5 St. Paul, upon a little Mountain, at the foot whereof run two pleasant Rivers, which fall not far off into the River of Inianibis. A Town of about 100 houses, one Church, two Convents, and a Colledge of Jesuits; neighboured by Mines of Gold found in the Mountains, called Pernabiacaba. 6 St. Phillips, a small Town on the banks of Inianibis, which there begins to enlarge it self; and passing thence falleth at the last in the River Parana, one of the greatest Tributaries to Rio de la Plata.

2. Of RIO DE JANEIRO, or the River of January, so called, because entred into that moneth by John Diaz de Solis, An. 1515. neglected by the Portugals, it was seized on by the French under the conduct of Villegagnon, employed herein by Admiral Chastillon, a great friend of the Hugonets, to whom it was intended for a place of Refuge (as New-England afterwards for the like:) but within three years after their first coming thither (An. 1558.) regained by the Portugals, and the French put unto the sword. Places of most consideration in it, 1 Collignia, the Fort and Colony of the French, so named in honour of Gaspard Colligni, (commonly called Chastillon) by whose encouragement it was founded. Situate on the Bay of the River Janeiro, which the French called Ganabara. 2 St. Sebastian, built at the mouth of the same Bay by the Portugals, after they had expelled the French, and fortified with four strong Bulwarks. 3 Angra des Reyes, distant twelve leagues Westward from the mouth of the Bay; not long since made a Portugal Colony. Besides these, there are two great Burroughs of the natural Brasilians, in which are said to be above 2000 Inhabitants.

3. Of the HOLY GHOST (del Spiritu Santo) one of the most fertile Provinces of all Brasil; well stored with Cotton-wool, and watered with the River Parayba, large and full of fish. The only Town of note in it, is Spiritu Santo, inhabited by about 200 Portugals. The chief building of it, a Church dedicated to St. Francis, a Monastery of Benedictines, and a Colledge of Jesuits; the chief conveniency, a safe and commodious Haven, capable of the greatest Vessels.

4. Of PORTO SEGURO, the secure Haven, so called by Capralis, who first discovered it; when being tossed at Sea by a terrible tempest, he had here refreshed himself. Chief Towns hereof 1 Porto Seguro, built on the top of a white Cliff, which commands the Haven; of more Antiquity than Fame, of more fame than bigness; as not containing fully 200 Families. 2 Santa Cruz, three leagues from the other; a poor Town, with as poor an Harbour: the Patrimony and Inheritance of the Dukes of Avera, in the Realm of Portugal. 3 Santo Amaro, or St. Omers, once of great note for making Sugars, for which use here were five Ingenios, or Sugar Engines: deserted by the Portugals for fear of the Salvages, against whom they had not power enough to make good the place, and the Sugars destroyed of purpose, that they might not come into the hands of the barbarous people.

5. Of DES ILHEOS, or of the Isles, so named from certain Islands lying against the Bay on which the principal Town is seated, called also Ilheos, or the Island (with like Analogie as a Town of good note in Flanders, hath the name of Insula, or Liste) The Town consisting of about 150 or 200 Families, situate on a little River, but neighboured by a great Lake of 12 leagues in compass (out of which the River doth arise:) full of a great but wholesome fish, which they call Axonatos, some of which are affirmed to weigh 28 pounds. This Colony, much endangered by the Guaymuri, a Race of Salvages more Salvage than any of their fellows: who being driven out of their own Country, fell into this Prefecture, which they had utterly destroyed; if some of St. Georges Reliques, as the Jesuits tell us (but I finde no man to believe it) sent by their General from Rome, An. 1581. had not stayed their fury; and given the Portugals the better.

6. Of TODOS LOS SANTOS, or All-Saints, so called from a large Bay of that name, upon which it lieth; in breadth two leagues and an half, 18 fathom deep, and full of many little Islands: but flourishing and pleasant, and well stored with Cotton-wool. A Bay in which are many safe Stations and Roads for shipping, and therefore of great use and consequence in those furious Seas. Memorable for the hardy Enterprize of Peter Heyns, a Dutch-man, Admiral of the Navy of the United Provinces; who in the year 1627. seized on a Fleet of Spaniards, consisting of 26 sail of ships (four of them being men of War) all lying under the protection of the Ports and Castles, built for the safety of that Bay. For thrusting in amongst them with his own ship only (the rest not being able to follow) he so laid about him, that having sunk the Vice-Admiral, he took all the rest, conditioning only for their lives; notwithstanding all the shot which was made against him from the ships and Castles, and 42 pieces of Ordnance planted on the shore. Chief Towns hereof 1 S. Salvador, built on a little Hill on the North-side of the Bay, by the Thomas de Souza; adorned with many Churches, and Religious houses; and fortified (besides the Wall) with three strong Castles; the one called S. Anthony, the other S. Philip, and the third Tapeffe. Yet not so strong by reason of some Hills adjoining which command the Town, but that it was taken by the Hollanders, An. 1624. recovered by the Spaniards the next year after, and since lost again. 2 Paripé, more within the Land, four leagues from S. Saviour. 3 Seregippe del Rei, a small Town, and seated on as small a River, but amongst many rich Pastures, and some veins of silver.

7. Of FERNAMBURCK, one of the richest Præfectures for Tobacco, Sugar, and the great quantity of Brasíl-wood, which is brought hence yearly for the Diers, in all this Country; but destitute of Corn, and most other necessities, with which supplied from the Cavaries, and sometimes from Portugal. Chief Towns hereof 1 Olinda, the largest and best peopled of all Brasíl; containing above 2000 persons; not reckoning in the Church-men, nor taking the great number of Slaves which they keep for their Sugar-work into the account: for whose use they have here eight Parochial Churches, five Religious houses, and some Hospitals. Situate near the Sea-side, but on so uneven a piece of ground, as makes it not capable of a Regular fortification; the Haven being little, and not very commodious, but defended at the entrance by a well built Castle; and that well planted with Brasíl pieces. Which notwithstanding, in the year 1595, the Castle and the Suburbs along the Port (wherein they used to stow all their chief Commodities) were taken by Captain James Lancaster, and some few of the English; who having tarried in the Haven above a month, brought home with him eight of his own ships, four French-men, and three Hollanders; which came in by chance; all laden with the choicest Merchandise of Brasíl, and India. 2 Amatta de Brasíl, ten miles from Olinda, the Inhabitants whereof live by selling the Brasíl-wood. 3. S. Laurencio, a well frequented Village, but as yet unwall'd. 4 Poincur, upon a River so named. 5 Antonio de Cabo, near the Cape of S. Augustines; both of good note for the great quantity of Sugars which are made in each. 6 Garafu, about five leagues from Olinda, inhabited for the most part by poor and Mechanical persons, till the year 1632. when taken by the Hollander, and planted with a people of higher quality. This Præfecture, belonging formerly to the Earls of Albuquerque (a great house in Spain) is now wholly in the hands of the States of the Provinces united: the Town of Olinda being took by them in the year 1629. the Port and all the Avenues unto it so strongly fortified, that they have hitherto enjoyed it.

8. Of TAMARACA, so called from an Island of that name, distant about five miles from Olinda; of no great note but for the Haven, and an impregnable Castle on the top of an Hill for defence thereof. Which when the Hollanders could not take, they built a strong Balwark at the mouth of the Port, and so blocked it up, that it hath since been of no use to the Spaniard. This the least Præfecture in Brasíl, but withal the ancientest; extended three leagues only in length, and but two in breadth: the Patrimony of the Earls of Monfanto in Portugal, who received hence yearly, when entire, thirty thousand Ducats. But his Rents much diminished, it not quite inverted, since the loss of the Haven.

9. Of PARAIBA, so called from a River of that name (but by the Spaniard called Domingo) of most note herein. On the banks whereof standeth Paraiba, the chief Town of it, at the bottom of an Arm of the Sea, about three leagues from the Main, but capable of pretty good ships to the very Town. The Town inhabited not long since by 500 Portugals, besides Slaves and Negroes. Not walled, till they began to stand in fear of the Hollanders, on the loss of Olinda; but more secured by a strong Castle on the Promontory called Cabo Dels, which the Hollanders have in vain attempted, than by any works within the Land. A Castle which acknowledgeth the French for the Founders of it, who for a while were possessed of this Tract, and gave name to an adjoining Haven, called Port Francois; but ousted by the Portugal, An. 1584. who have since held their footing in it, but with fear of the Hollanders; especially since their taking of a little Island lying over against them, called the Isle of Noronha.

10. Of RIO GRANDE, so called from the River Potengi (as the Natives term it) which the Portugals call Rio Grande, or the great River; not made a Præfecture till of late. For lying open, as it were, to the next Pretender, some of the French began to fix here, An. 1597. But the King of Spain not willing to have any such neighbour, commanded the Captain of Paraiba, to drive them thence; which was done accordingly. But then the Salvages beginning to rise up in Arms, the Captain of Paraiba was fain to seek aid from him of Fernambuck; by whose help having slain five thousand, and took three thousand of them, the rest became Vassals to the Portugals: who built here an impregnable Castle (which is all the footing they have in it) well manned and furnished with Ammunition and all other necessities; very few Portugals, except those of the Garrison, being yet come over.

11. Of SIARA, a late Præfecture also, in which the Portugals have no more than a Castle, with a dozen houses, or thereabouts, besides that of the Governour adjoining to it. So named from an Haven called Siara, but of no great note, and capable but of little Vessels. Of some trade in regard of the Cry- stal, Cotton-wool, and some precious stones, found in the Country hereabouts: and certainly would be of greater, if once the Portugals would be active and pursue the Conquest; here being great plenty of Sugar-Canes, but no works to make it.

12. Of MARAGNON, an Island lying in the mouth of the great River so called, in the further parts of Brasíl Northwards, and many leagues distant from Siara, the last of their Præfectures; the Country intervening not yet discovered, or otherwise made known unto us, than by the names of the Ports and Promontories found upon the Coast. An Island of a fruitful soil, if pains and husbandry were not wanting: affording naturally Maize, and a Root called Maniot, both which the Salvages use for bread; good store of Cotton-wools, Saffron, Brasíl-wood, and the best Tobacco; and in some places Balm and Ambur. Watered with many fresh Rivers, and pleasant Springs: well-wooded both for Timber and Fuel: and in a word, blessed with so temperate an Air (though so near the Equator) that no place can be more commodious for the life of man. The people strong of body, healthy and long-lived without any baldness; industrious in their Feather-works and Manufactures of Cotton; the Women curious in ordering their hair, fruitful in Child-bearing, and that till 80 years old and sometimes more. Both Sexes naked till their marriage; and then apparelled only from the waist to their knees.

The Villages hereof possessed by the Natives, consisted but of four great Houses; each of them two, or three hundred foot in length, and twenty, or thirty foot in breadth; so placed as they resembled a Quadrangular Cloyster: And in each house so many households, that commonly each of their Villages, or Taves (for so they called them) contained three hundred persons, and some twice that number: Of these were twenty seven in all, whose names I hold impertinent to be mustered here: The total estimate of the people when the French came thither, amounting to 12000 souls. For the French trading in this Island, and carrying themselves courteously amongst the Natives, found them not unwilling to admit a Colony of that Nation, if sent over to them: by whose aid they might free themselves from all other Pretenders, and be instructed in the Gospel. Accordingly a Colony, and four Capuchin Fryers, are sent over to them, An. 1612. Some Salvages gained unto the Faith, and a strong Castle, called S. Lewis commodiously built, and planted with 22 pieces of Ordnance; the effect of that Voyage. But long they had not rested there when dis-seized by the Portugals, sent thither under the Conduct of Hierome de Albuquerque, Anno 1614. Who to the Castle of S. Lewis, which the French had built, added those of S. Mary, and S. Francis, planted two Villages in the Island by the names of S. Andrew, and S. Jago, and ever since have held it without molestation.

13. Of PARA, the most Northern Præfecture of Brasíl, towards Guiana; so called from the River of Para, (supposed to be a branch of the River of Amazon) which runneth through it. The River at the mouth of it, two miles in breadth, and in the middle of the Channel fifteen fathoms deep; on the banks whereof (but on an higher ground than the rest) the Portugals have built the Castle of Para, in form Quadrangular, and well walled, except towards the River: the Country thereabouts inhabited by 300 Portugueses, besides the Garrison.

Now for the fortunes of the whole, it never did acknowledge any one Supream. Divided into many Tribes, and each Tribe governed by their Chiefs, as in other Countries. These Tribes so many, and the Muster of their names so useless, that I now forbear it. In this estate they lived when discovered first; but by whom first discovered, will not be agreed on. The Spaniards, to get some colour of a Title for the Crown of Castile, ascribe it to John Pinson, and Diego de Lope, two of their own Country; who as they say, had landed on it in the year 1500. before the coming of Capralis, though the same year also: The Portugals attribute the discovery of it to Pedro Alvarez de Capralis, sent by their King Emanuel to the East-Indies: who being driven over higher from the Coast of Guinea, took possession of it, and as a Monument thereof, advanced a Cross, giving the name of Sancta Crucis, or the Holy Cross, to this new discovery. That name changed afterwards to Brasíl, from the abundance of that Wood (as it is conceived) which was found amongst them. Notice hereof being given to the Court of Portugal, Americus Vesputius a Noble Florentine, An. 1501. and after him John de Empoli, another of that Nation in the year 1503. were by Emmanuel employed in a further discovery. Who speeding fortunately in it, the Portugals did accordingly send over some Plantations thither. But a great controversy growing betwixt them and the Spaniard, to whether of the two it of right belonged: the Spaniard was content to yield it to the Crown of Portugal, though by the Bull, or Edict of Pope Alexander the sixth (by whom the whole undiscovered World was divided betwixt those two Kings) it seemed to fall within the Grant made to the Crown of Castile. Enjoyed by this Emmanuel, and the Kings succeeding, till the death of Sebastian (which Sebastian the Jesuits look on as the Founder of all their Colledges in this Country) and by the Spaniards since the death of Henry (whose reign continued but a year) though in the name and right of the Crown of Portugal; that Nation being so prudently jealous of their interests in it, that they would not suffer any of the Subjects of Spain to grow great amongst them. By them possessed entirely without any Rivals (I mean for so much of the Country as they had subdued) till of late years the Hollanders put in for a part; and got the Præfectures of Fernambuck, and Todos Los Santos (or the Bay) by the Right of War. The rest with all the other Members of the Crown of Portugal, in the late Revolt of that Nation from the King of Spain, submitting unto John the 4th. of the house of Bragance, whom the Portugueses had made their King, Anno 1639.

OF GUIANA.

GUIANA is bounded on the East with the Main Atlantick, on the West with the Mountains of Pern, or rather some undiscovered Countries interposed betwixt them; on the North with the River Orenoque, and on the South with that of the Amazons. The reason of the name I find not, unless it be so called from the River Wia, of which more anon.

It is situate on both sides of the Line, extended from the fourth Degree of Southern, to the eighth of the Northern Latitude. The Air, notwithstanding this situation under the Aequator, affirmed to be temperate, the Eastern winds (which they call the Brises) constantly blowing about Noon, and mitigating the extreme heats thereof by their cooler blasts. The Country towards the Sea-side flat and level, the inland parts more mountainous and swelled with hills: in all places so adorned with Nature's Tapestry, the boughs and branches of the Trees never unclothed or left naked, (fruit either ripe or green growing still upon them) that no Country in the world could be better qualified. The particular Commodities of it we shall see anon, when the particular parts hereof come into Discourse.

Of the People it is said in general, that they have amongst them no settled Government; and though they acknowledge some superiority in the Chiefs of their Tribes, yet it is only voluntary, as long and as little as they please. Adultery and Murder, which are only punishable, not otherwise expiated but by the death of the Offender. The richer sort have two or three Wives, and sometimes more; the poor but one, and hardly able to keep her: they that have more, and they who have but one, a like jealous of out their brains. Their wives, especially the elder, they use for Servants; and he which hath most such, is the greatest man. Without Religion, or any notion of a Godhead; not so far onwards on the way to the worship of the true God, as to be Idolaters: for though Idolatry be mistaken in the proper Object, it supposeth a Deity; and they who have this Principle, That there is a God, have learned one, and not the Accompts amongst themselves they keep with a bundle of sticks; which they diminish or increase according to the times of their contract. Their Funerals they solemnize with a Feast, but with such diversity in the deportment of both Sexes, that whiles the Women howl extremely, the Men perform the Obsequies with singing and excessive drinking; the one as improper for a Feast, as the other for a Funeral.

Rivers of most note in it, besides 1 Orenoque, and 2 the River of Amazons, and those rather boundaries betwixt this and the neighbouring Provinces, than proper unto this alone. 3 Arrawari, 4 Conawini, 5 Cabiroung, or Cassipare, all falling into the same main Atlantick, betwixt the River of Amazons and Wiapoco: the last arising out of the Lake of the Arachosi, half a mile broad at the mouth or influx into the Sea, and the last spans deep. 6 Wiapoco, of which more hereafter. 7 Wia, 8 Cajane, 9 Marwine, 10 Essequibe, a River of twenty dayes journey long, betwixt Wiapoco and the River of Orenoque or Rallana.

The whole divided commonly into these four parts, 1 Rio de las Amazonas, or the River of Amazons, 2 Wiapoco or Guiana specially so called, 3 Orenoque, and 4 the Isles of Guiana.

1. RIO DE LAS AMAZONES, or the River of Amazons, containeth that part of this Country which lieth along the tract of that famous River. The soil in some places dry and barren, in others fertile and productive of the choicest fruits. Full of large Woods, and in those Woods most sort of Trees which are to be found in America: One amongst others of most note, (and perhaps peculiar to Guiana) which they call the Totoke; a tree of great bulk, and as great a fruit; this last as big as a man's head, and so hard withal, that when the fruit grows ripe and ready to fall, the people dare not go into the woods without an helmet or some such shelter over their heads, for fear of beating out their brains. The kernels of it, for the most part ten or twelve in number, have the taste of Almonds, and are said to be provocative in point of Venerie. Of which the Salvages have this By-word, Pigue secke in Sac (that is to say, Eat Totoke), if thou wouldst be potent in the Acts of Venus. Here are also Sagar-canes in some places; and the Plant called Pita, the taste whereof is said to be like Strawberries, Claret-wine, and Sugar.

The principal Inhabitants of this part of the Country, the Taos, Cocketumay, Pattencui, Tockianes, Tomoes, and Wackebanes dwelling on the Continent; the Maraons, and Aromians possessed of the Islands. Towns of note I have met with none amongst them; though every house (most of them 150 foot in length, 20 in breadth, and entertaining at the least an hundred persons) might pass sufficiently for a Village. Yet they are safer housed than so, for otherwise their houses would afford them but little comfort in the over-flowings of the River, which drown all the Country: and therefore they betake themselves to the tops of trees and there remain like Birds, with their several families, till the waters be drawn in again, and the earth become more comfortable for habitation. Yet I find some of these their dwellings called by proper names, as 1 Matarem, 2 Rokery, 3 Anarcaprock, 4 Haaman, 5 Womians, and 6 Cogemymne. But I find nothing but their names, and enough of that.

The

The first Discoverer of this River and the parts adjoining, was Orellana, the Lieutenant of Gonzales Pizarro, whom his brother Francisco Pizarro, then Viceroy of Pern, had made the Governour of Quito. Moved with the noise of some rich Countries beyond the Andes, he raised sufficient Forces, and passed over those Mountains; where finding want of all things for the life of man, they made a boat, and sent this Orellana to bring in provisions. But the River which he chanced into, was so swift of course, that he was not able to go back; and therefore of necessity to obey his fortune in following the course of that strong water. Passing along by divers desolate and unpeopled places, he came at last into a Country planted and inhabited; where he first heard of the Amazons (by those Salvages called Comapuyaras) of whom he was bidden to beware as a dangerous people: And in the end having spent his time in passing down this River from the beginning of January to the end of August, 1540, he came at last into the Sea; and getting into the Isle of Cubagua, sailed into Spain: the course of his voyage down the water he estimated at 1800 leagues (or 5400 English miles) but found no Amazons in his passage, as himself affirmed; only some masculine women shewed themselves intermixt with the men, to oppose his landing; and in some places he found men with long hair like women, either of which might make these parts believed to be held by Amazons. But to proceed, arriving at the Court of Spain, he got Commission for the conquest of the Countries by him discovered; and in the year 1549 he betook himself unto the service. But though he found the mouth of the River, one of them at least, he could never hit upon the Channel which brought him down, though attempted often. Which ill success, with the consideration of his loss both in fame and fortunes, brought him to his grave; having got nothing but the honour of the first discovery, and the leaving of his name to that famous River, since called Orellana. The enterprize pursued, but with like success, by one Pedro de Orsua, in 1569, after which the Spaniards gave it over. And though the English and the Hollanders, have endeavoured an exact discovery, and severally begun some Plantations in it, yet they proved as unfortunate as the others; their Quarters being beaten up by the neighbouring Portugals, before they were sufficiently fortified to make any resistance.

2. WIAPOCO, or GUIANA specially so called, taketh up the middle of this Country, on both sides of the River of Wiapoco, whence it hath his name. A River of a long course, but not passable, up the stream above 16 miles, by reason of a Cataract, or great fall from the higher ground: in breadth betwixt that Cataract, and the Essequium, about the tenth part of a mile; at the Essequium, or influx a whole mile at least, and there about two fathoms deep.

The Country on both sides of this River very rich and fertile; so natural for Tobacco, that it groweth to nine handfuls long. Sagar-canes grow here naturally without any planting, and on the shrubs great store of Cotton, and the Dye by some called Orellana. Plenty of Penison in their Woods, and of Fish in their Rivers, their fields well stored with Beasts, which themselves call Moyers; in shape and use resembling Kine, but without any horns. The people generally of a modest and ingenious countenance; Naked, but would wear cloaths, if they had them, or knew how to make them. Their bread is made of a Plant called Cassavi; of which also being dried and chewed, and then strained through a wicker vessel, they make a kind of drink in colour like new Ale, but not so well tasted, &c. of less continuance. The greatest part of their food is fish, which they intoxicate with a strong-scented wood, and so take them up as they lie floating on the top of the water. Much troubled with a Worm like a Flea, (by the Spaniards called Nigua) which get under the Nails of their Toes, and multiply there to infinite numbers, and the no less torture of the Patient, without speedy prevention: No better remedy found out, than to pour Wax melting hot on the place affected; which being pulled off, when 'tis cold, draws the Vermis with it, sometimes 800 at a pull. The Women of such easie child-birth, that they are delivered without help, and presently bring the Child to his Father (for they have so much natural modesty as to withdraw from company upon that occasion) who washeth it with water, and painteth it with several colours, and so returneth it to the Mother.

Rivers of note here are very many; no Country under Heaven being better watered, nor fuller of more pleasant and goodly streams. The names of some of them on both sides of the Wiapoco we have had before: the chief of which I take to be Wia, affirmed to be of a long course, a goodly River all the way, and at the mouth thereof to be large and broad; which passing through the heart of the Country, in the fourth degree and 40 minutes of Northern Latitude, may possibly occasion both the whole and this part more specially to be called Wiana, and by the Dutch, who cannot pronounce the W, Guiana. Certain I am, that by the name of Wiana I have found it written in approved Authors. But what need further search be made after lesser Rivers, (which will offer themselves to us of their own accord) when we have a Lake to pass over like a Sea for bigness, (magnum famisum, & vastum infar maris, as my Author hath it) by the Taos, or Jaos called Raponovisin, by the Caribes (the old Inhabitants of this Country) Parimen: Situate about a dayes journey from the River Essequibe: and neighboured by the great and famous City Manoa, which the Spaniards call El Dorado (or the Golden City) from the abundance of Gold, in Coyn, Plate, Armour, and other Furniture, which was said to be in it. The greatest City, as some say, not only of America, but of all the World. For Diego de Ordaz, one of the Companions of Cortez in his Mexican Wars, and by him condemned for a mutiny, put into a Boat alone without any victual, and so cast off to seek his fortune; affirmed at his return, that being taken by some of the Guianians, and by them carried to their King, then residing at Manoa, he entered the City at high-noon, travelled all the rest of that day, and the next also until night, before he came to the Kings Palace; but then he saith that he was led blind-fold all the way: And therefore possibly enough this City might be no such miracle as the story makes it; Don Diego being either abused by the reports of the the Salvages, or willing to abuse the world with such empty fictions. For though the Spaniards and the English have severally fought, and that with incredible diligence to find out this City, yet none of them have hitherto had the fortune to fall upon it. So that I fear it may be said in the Poets language, —Et quod non invenis usquam,

Esse putas nusquam— i. e.

That which is no where to be found,
Think not to be above the ground.

Nor is there much more credit to be given unto his Relations of the great Court kept here by one of the Ingas; who being forsooth one of the younger Brethren of Atabaliba the last King of Peru, at the conquest of that Kingdom with many thousands of his Followers came into this Country; and subduing the Caribes, erected here a second Peruvian Monarchy. For besides that Atabaliba had no brethren but Guasem and Mango who both died in Peru, how impossible must it needs appear, that this Guianian King, knowing so well the thirst of the Spaniards after Gold, would either suffer him to return and disclose the secrets of his State; or send him away loaded with Gold, as 'tis said he did; Who sheweth his Treasure to a Thief, doth deserve to lose it. And therefore letting pass these dreams of an El Dorado, let us descend to places of less Magnificence, but of greater reality. Amongst which I reckon 1 Carip, most memorable for a Colony of English there planted by Captain Robert Harcourt, An. 1608. situate on the banks of the Wiapoco, near the mouth thereof, on the advantage of a Rock, and that Rock so difficult of access, that they feared no danger from an Enemy. The Air so found and answerable to the constitution of an English body, that of 30 which were left there for three years together, there dyed but six, and those six rather by misfortune, and some crofs accident, than by any diseases. 2 Gomeribo, on the top of an hill near the mouth of the Bay of Wiapoco, possessed a while by some Hollanders, but soon deserted. 3 Moeyemon, a Village of the Paragoti, on the banks of the River Marrwinen. 4 Cremnay, on the other side of the same River, possessed by the Caribes: the King of the first (for each Tribe had its several Princes) being named Maperitaka, affirmed to be a virtuous man, and kind to strangers; of the later, Minapa. 5 Tamparamunen, about an hundred Leagues from the mouth of that River. And 6 Mareshego, four dayes journey from the other; both possessed by the Caribes. The King, or Cacique of those last, at Captain Harcourt's being there (of which time we speak) named Areminta; affirmed to have a skin like a piece of Buff.

The principal Families of this part, besides the Yaoi, or Jagos, and the Marrsons spoken of before, who possess almost all the Sea-coasts of this Country, are said to be Armucca, the Sapayoy, the Mayi, and the Aracouri; of different Languages, and Customs, though neer neighbours unto one another. Originally inhabitants of the Island of Trinidad, and the River of Orenoque: whence driven by the Spaniards they came into this Tract, and beating the old Inhabitants, whom they call by the common name of Caribes, higher into the Country, possessed themselves of the Sea-shores, and the parts adjoining: each Tribe or Family being governed by its several Chief, as before was intimated. The Netherlanders for a time had some footing in it, but they quickly left it; endeavouring nothing more in the time of their short stay amongst them, than to make the People disaffected to the English; of whose pretensions to these parts, and designs to plant them they had good intelligence. And so much was confessed by some of the Natives, when they had found by good experience and acquaintance, how much the English were abused in those mis-reports. Afterwards in the year 1604. Captain Charles Leigh set sail from Woolwich on the Thames, and in May fell upon the River of Wiapoco, where he was kindly entertained, gratified with an House and Garden, and his Aid craved against the Caribes and their other Enemies. He took possession of the Country in the name of King James and the Crown of England; and caused the River of Wiapoco to be called (by his own name) Caroleigh: but that name ended with his life, and that shortly after, he dying in his return on Ship-board. The design went forwards notwithstanding, and in the year 1608. an English Colony is brought hither by Captain Harcourt, a new possession taken in the name of King James, the Colony planted at Carpo before-mentioned, the Country further searched into by that Noble Gentleman, than ever formerly by any, or by any since. After three years, the Colony wanting fit supply, returned home again; the Plantation never since pursued, though by some projected. Yet so far are these Salvages beholden to the English Nation, that as they did defend them at their being there against the Caribes, so at their going off they taught them the use of Arms, and put them into a posture of defence; inabling them thereby to preserve themselves against all their Enemies.

3. O R E N O Q U E, or the Province of the River Orenoque comprehendeth the North parts of Guiana, lying upon and towards the Banks of that famous River of which we have already spoken. The Country very rich and pleasant, consisting of large Plains, many miles in compass, adorned with the embroydery of Flowers, and unknown Plants, exceeding pleasant to the eye; and sometimes interlaced with Hills, reported to be furnished with rich Mines of Gold and Silver. The Rivers liberally stored with Fish, and the Forrests both with Beasts and Fowls. No Country in America, not Peru it self, said to be comparable to it for abundance of Treasure. Some also add a whole Mountain of Crystal to be seen afar off from Winecaporo: and tell us (but in general terms) of more goodly Cities than elsewhere in all Peruana, but neither the Spaniards nor the English could ever see them, thought they diligently searched into most parts of this Country.

The Orenoque.

The people, as of several Nations, so of several Natures: The Capuri, and Macureos, for the most part Carpenters, live by making Canoas or Boats, which they sell into Guiana for Gold, and to Trinidad for Tobacco; in the immoderate taking whereof they exceed all Nations. When a Cacique or Commander dyeth, they make great lamentation; and after the flesh is putrified and fallen from the bones; they take up the Skeleton, and hang it up in the house where he dwelt, decking his skull with Feathers of all colours, and hanging gold Plates about the bones of his arms and thighs. Of the Tivitius dwelling upon some of the Northern branches, it is affirmed by Sir Walter Raleigh, that they are a goodly and valiant People, and to have the most manly and most deliberate speech of any Nation in the World. A People which eat of nothing that is set or sown: the children of Dame Nature, and therefore will not be beholden for their livelihood unto Art, or Industry; using the tops of the Palm Tree for Bread; Fish, Deer, and Swines flesh, for the rest of their sustenance. The Assany, Sayma, Wikeri, and Arornas, affirmed to be as black as Negroes, but with smoother hair: And to use Arrows dipt in so strange a poison, as doth not only bring death, but death with most unspeakable torments, especially if the wounded party be permitted to drink. Of the Arwack of this Tract I find nothing singular, but that when any of their Kings or Caciques die, their wives and neerest of the kindred beat their bones to powder, and mingle it with their drink like spice.

Places of most importance in it (for to speak any thing particularly of those many Rivers which fall into the Orenoque, were an endless labour) 1 Comolaha, on the South of Orenoque, but somewhat distant, in which they keep some Annual Fairs for the sale of Women. One of our English men, left by Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1595. affirmed that he bought eight of them (the eldest not above eighteen) for a half-penny red-hafted knife, which he brought from England: But withal telleth us for his credit, that he gave them to some Salvages of his acquaintance. 2 Morequito, a known Port upon some branch of the Orenoque; of much use to the English in their first discovery of these parts. 3 Wenicaporo, so called from another branch of that River bearing this name; from whence was shewed an high Hill said to be of Crystal, but so far off, that it was thought better to believe than to go and see. Others report of this Mountain that above it there is a mighty River, which falling down this Cataract on the lower grounds, makes a terrible noise, as if 1000 Bells were knocked one against another. And possible enough it is, that this great fall of water discerned far off, may (with the help of Sun-shine) carry some resemblance of a Crystal Mountain. 4 S. Thome, situate on the Main Channel of the River Orenoque, a Town of 140 houses stretched out in length for half a mile, but slightly built, a Parish Church in the midst of it, and at the West end a Convent of Franciscan Friars. The only Town of all Guiana possessed by the Spaniards; not fortified till against the last coming of Sir Walter Raleigh, Anno 1617. but taken by him at that time, and since that by the Hollanders, An. 1629. though by both quitted not long after; it returned to the Spaniards.

The several Nations of this Tract have been named before, Discovered first by Diego de Ordaz, Anno 1531. furnished with a Patent for the conquest of it by Charles the fifth. But not hitting on the right Channel, or otherwise not able to overcome the difficulties which lay before him, he returned to Spain: effecting nothing but the opening of the way to others. Followed herein by Hierom de Ortal, An. 1533. and after by Herrera, who proceeded further than the others, An. 1536. and finally by Goncalvo Ximenez de Quesada and Antonio Berreo with far better fortune; who beginning their journey from the New Realm of Granada in the search of Guiana, fell casually into this great River, as Orellana did before into that of the Amazons. But yet not perfectly discovered till the year 1595. In which Sir Walter Raleigh having taken Prisoner this Antonio Berreo, and learning of him the success of his Expedition, resolved upon the undertaking; and searched so far into the Country by the course of this River, that some have since called it Ralianna. The business followed the next year (after his return) by Captain Lawrence Keymis, employed by Raleigh in that service, who at his coming found the Country possessed by the Spaniards, by whom 20 or 30 of the moveable houses of the Salvages had been laid together like a Town; and all the Natives, who wished well to the English, dispersed and scattered. So that without any other effect of his journey, than the finding out the true mouth of the Orenoque (which he first discovered) he set sail for England. In the mean time it had been moved at the Court, that a Colony of English should be planted there, and some proportionable force sent over to make good the Action. But the motion upon good advice rejected, first in regard of the distance of it from the main body of our strength: And 2ly. because the Spaniards bordering neer upon it, might easily call out small Forces and make the enterprise dishonourable to the English Nation, who had then the better of him in the point of Honourable Achievements. It was permitted notwithstanding unto private Adventurers to try their Fortunes on it, without engaging of the State: whereupon followed the Voyages of Leigh, and Harcourt, before spoken of. But they not being able to go through with so great a business, let it fall again. And so it rested till the last unfortunate Voyage of Sir Walter Raleigh, licensed by Commission under the Great Seal to search into some Mines of Gold and Silver, which he was credibly informed of when he was in this Country. A design followed with great hopes, by the Undertakers, most of them being person, of honour, and well attended: but so unfortunate in the issue (the Spaniards being made acquainted with it before his coming) that at the taking of S. Thome, he lost his own Son, and a great part of his Forces: and after his return (not able with the residue to make good his ground against the Enemy) was executed on a former Attaindure, in the old Palace of Westminster, Octob. 29. Anno 1618. Of whom I cannot choose but note what is said by Camden Clarendieu, in his Annals: Vir erat nunquam satis laudato studio & Regionis remotae detegendi, & Navalem Angliæ gloriam promovendi. And so I leave him to his rest in the bed of peace.

Trinidad.

4. THE ISLANDS which properly are accounted of as parts of Guiana, lie either scattered on the shore, in the mouths, or bodies of the greater Rivers: some of them not inhabited, others of no name; and none at all of any reckoning. Only the Isle of 1 Trinidad, and 2 Tobago, are of some esteem: which though somewhat further off from the shores of this Country, yet being that of Trinidad, lieth in the mouth of the Orenoque, and that both of them with Guiana pass but for one Presidio, or Provincial Government, we shall describe them in this place.

1. TRINIDAD, or Insula S. Trinitatis, lieth at the mouth of the River Orenoque over against Paria, from which separated by a Frith, or Strait, by Columbus, who first discovered it, called Boca del Drago, or the Dragon's mouth, because of the dangerousness of the passage. Extended from the ninth to the tenth Degree of Northern Latitude; the most Southern Angle of it, called Punta del Gallo, as that on the North-East Punta de Galera. The Frith, or Strait, but three miles over, yet made more narrow by the interposition of four, or five little Islands, which the Sea breaketh through with great violence, leaving only two entrances for shipping into the Gulf, called the Gulf of Paria. The length hereof 25 leagues, the breadth 18. of a cloudy and unhealthy air, but a fertile soil, abundantly well stored with such commodities as are of the natural growth of America, viz. Maize, Sugar-Canes, Cotton-wool, and the best kinde of Tobacco, much celebrated formerly by the name of a Pipe of Trinidad. Here is also a sufficiency of Fruits and Cattel for the use of the Natives; and here and there some veins of Gold, and other Metals: such store of Pitche, that innumerable ships might be laden with it; but that it is conceived to be unfit for the carking of ships, because it softneth in the Sun. The place in which it groweth, by the Spaniards called Tierra de Bren, by the Natives Pichen.

The people of the same nature and disposition with the other Americans: distinguished into several Tribes, but most of them reduced under the power of two petit Princes. But the greatest part of the Inhabitants, to avoid the Tyranny of the Spaniards, forsook their Country, and ferried over into Guiana, where before we found them. The chief Town of it called S. Joseph, situate on the South-side of the Island, on the banks of a little River which the Natives call Carone, the ordinary residence of the Governour, who hath under him besides this Island the Provinces of Guiana and El Dorado (for so goes his Title) yet a small Town, consisting but of 40 houses when it was taken, An. 1595. by Sir Walter Raleigh; Antonio Berreo the Governour of it being then made Prisoner, who furnished his taker with many notions (and some utterly fabulous) towards the discovery of Guiana.

This Island first discovered by Christopher Columbus, in his third voyage, An. 1497. was by him called La Trinidad, it may be with some reference to the form hereof, shooting into the Sea with three Points or Promontories. Nothing else memorable in the fortunes and story of it, but what is touched upon before.

2. TABAGO lieth on the North-East of La Trinidad, from which 8 miles distant: full of safe Harbours for the bigness, watered with 18 little Rivers, and well stored with Woods; amongst which some Palmito Trees, some like that of the Brasil-wood, others not elsewhere to be found. Of Fowl and Fish sufficient to maintain it self. Now called New Walcheren, with reference to an Island of that name in Zealand, by some of the Low-Country-men, who begin to plant there.

And so much for GUIANA.

OF Cumana.

OF P A R I A.

PARIA is bounded on the East with Guiana, and the Islands in the mouth of the Orenoque; on the West with the Gulf, or Bay of Venezuela, and part of the new Realm of Granada; on the North, with the main Atlantic Ocean, or Mare del Noort; the Countries lying on the South not discovered hitherto.

It took this name from a mistake of the Spaniards (as Pern, and Jacutin on the like) who asking, as all men do, the names of those new Regions which they discovered, and pointing to the Hills afar off, were answered Paria, that is to say, high Hills, or Mountains (for here begins that ledge of Mountains which are thence continued for the space of 3600 miles, to the Straits of Magellane) and so hath it ever since held the name of Paria. By some Writers it is also called Nova Andalusia; but I adhere unto the former.

The nature of the soil and people being very different, will be more properly considered in the several parts: The whole divided into the Continent and the Islands, which with their subdivisions, may be branched into these particulars, viz. 1 Cumana, 2 Venezuela, 3 S. Margarita, 4 Cubagna, and 5 the lesser Islands.

1. CUMANA hath on the East the Gulf of Paria, and the River Orenoque; on the West Venezuela: on the North and South bounded as before. So called from Cumana, one of the Rivers of it; on the banks whereof some Dominican Fryers (who first set footing in this Country) built themselves a Monasterie; that name communicated afterwards unto all the rest of this Tract.

It is extended East and West to the breadth of 110 leagues; the length thereof from North to South, said to be 400. But there is little of it known, and less of it planted by the Europeans; except some places near the Sea: there being no part of all America, the description whereof hath come so imperfectly to our hands, as they have of this. For except it be the names of some Bays, or Promontories, and of two, or three most noted Rivers, there is not much that doth require our consideration.

The Country, for so much as hath been discovered, neither rich nor pleasant; and consequently the less looked after: covered with shrubs, and overgrown with unprofitable briers and bushes. Heretofore famed for Pearl-fishing, all along the Coast, from the Gulf of Paria to that of Venezuela, called therefore Cofia de las Perlas; but that gainful trade hath long since failed it. Now only of esteem for a vein of most excellent Salt, found near the Promontory of Araya, and the Bay of Cariboo; gathered and digged up thereabouts in great abundance, and yet never diminishing. The parts adjoining take from hence the name of Salina; the Promontory bordering on the Frith, called Boca del Drago, the title, or appellation of Cape Salinus. Of some strange Creatures in this Country, as the beast called Capi; the soles of whose feet are like a shoe; a kind of Hog, which lives altogether upon Ants, or Pismires; Parots, and Bats, of more than ordinary greatness, I forbear to speak.

Of the people I find nothing singular, except it be, that having plenty of good fruits, as of fish and flesh, they use themselves to a far worse dyet, feeding on Horseleeches, Bats, Spiders, Grashoppers, Worms, Lice, and such other Vermin. In other things they seem to have a mixture of all ill customs used amongst the Salvages of Asia, Africa, and America; as multitudes of Wives, prostituting these Wives for the first nights lodging, to the Piccos, or Priests; and for any after, to their Guests; taking great pains to black their Teeth, and putting strange colours on their bodies instead of Garments, high-minded, treacherous, and revengeful; accustomed to the use of poisoned Arrows, which they envenom with Snakes blood, and other mixtures. In one thing only different from the rest of their neighbours, which is the fencing of their Grounds, or Orchards with a Cotton-thred, as high as ones Girdle; and an opinion which they have, that whosoever breaketh it, or goes over, or under it, shall die immediately. More safe in that persuasion, than by brazen Walls.

Rivers of most note, though of little, 1 Rio de Canoas, 2 Rio de Neveri, 3 Cumana de Bardones. The chief Havens, or Roads for shipping, 1 Moxino, 2 S. Foy. And 3 that called Commenagot. The places of most consideration, 1 Cumana, a Colony of Spaniards, on the bank of the River of that name; but distant about two miles from the Sea, on which it hath a safe and convenient Harbour; the Town so hedged about with Woods, that nothing can be seen of it till one come into it, except it be the Governours house, seated upon the top of a lofty Mountain. 2 S. Jago, a strong Fortrefs built by the Spaniards for defence of the Salt Lake, or Salinas, in the year 1622. on some intelligence that the Hollanders had a purpose to take them from him; fortified by the rules of Art, and planted with 30 pieces of Ordnance, the one half of Brasse. 3 S. Michael de Neveri, on the River so called, a Fort of the Spaniards. 4 Guaniba, a Village of the Natives.

The Country first discovered in the third voyage of Christopher Columbus; but the possession of it was first taken by two Dominicans; who out of a Religious zeal to plant the Gospel in these parts founded themselves a little Cell in the place where the Burrough of Cumana was after built, An. 1513. and doubtless had sped very well in their holy purpose, if some covetous Spaniards had not treacherously seized upon upon one of the Chiefs of their Tribes, and carried him with his Wife and Train into Spanish bondage. For this the poor Monks suffered death; I may call it Martyrdom; their death revenged by Alfonso de Ojeda, An. 1520. and he not long after slain by the Salvages, who also at the same time destroyed two Convents of Dominican and Franciscan Friars, which had been founded in the year 1518. A second force sent hither under Gonzalvo de Ocampo, wasteth a great part of the Country, beheads one of their Kings, and hangs some of his people. But that strength being withdrawn, or defeated also, Diego de Castellon is sent over by the Council resident in Hispaniola, to secure the possession of the Country, by whom the Cattle first, and after the Burrough of Cumana, was built and planted. Some other attempts therewere for a further conquest, but they proved nothing but attempts; except the building of the Cattle of S. Michael de Neviri, by Hierome of Ortal, and the discovery of some of the inland Provinces 150 leagues from the Seaside, by Antonio Sedeno, An. 1537. of which nothing followed, but the Registering of that tedious march.

2. VENEZUELA is bounded on the East with Cumana; on the West with the Bay of Venezuela, the Lake of Maracaybo, and the new Realm of Granada. So called by Alfonso de Ojeda, one of the first Discoverers of it, An. 1599. because he found a Burrough of some of the Salvages situate in the midst of the waters, to which was no passage but by boat: the word importing as much as Little Venice.

It is in length from East to West 130 leagues; in breadth where broadest about 80. The soil so plentiful of all sorts both of Fruit and Grain; the Country so replenished with all kind of Cattel, and excellent Pastures to maintain them, that the neighbouring Nations call it by the name of the Granary. Such store there goeth from hence of Wheaten meal, Biscoit, Cheefe, Hogs flesh, Ox-hides, and cloath of Cotton ready made, as very well deserves that title. Here is also very great plenty of Fish, Wilde beasts for hunting, Mines of Gold and other Metals; besides an infinite deal of Sarsaparilla sent to Europe yearly.

The people of the same nature and disposition with those of Cumana, with whom they do participate in all points of that Character. The Women (which was there omitted) trained up to ride, run, leap, and swim, as well as the men, to till the Land, and look to the business of the house, whilst the men hunt, or fish, to bring in provision. They count it a great part of beauty, to have very thick thighs; which they effect, by binding their legs hard below the knee, from their very Childhood. Shameless enough till married, after more reserved; though rather for fear of a divorce, than for love of modesty.

Rivers of note I meet with none; instead of which many convenient Harbours and capacious Bays. The chief, that called Golfo triste, from some shipwracks, or the like misfortune hapning to the Namer of it. 2 The Bay of Coro, or Venezuela, large and spacious, which by the Frish, or Streit of half a league over, receiveth the tribute of, 3 The great Lake called the Lake of Maracaybo, by the Spaniards called Lago de Nuestra Sennora, or our Ladies Lake, in compass about 80 leagues; on the banks whereof dwell many Nations of the Salvages, and into which there falleth a River from the Realm of Granada, by which the two Provinces maintain commerce with one another.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Maracayana, the furthest Port upon the East, and one of the best on all this Coast; in which the Spaniards of Cubagna had once a Garrison, under colour of defending the Country against the Salvages, but in plain truth to use it for an opportunity to seize upon their persons, and carry them away for Slaves. Those parts hereby unpeopled, or but meanly populous. 2 Venezuela, the most Western Town of all the Province, commonly called Coro, situate in the Latitude of 11 Degrees: built on the Sea, where it hath an Haven on each side; the one capacious, but not safe; the other safe enough, but not very capacious. But being built in a sweet and healthy air, and neighboured by the richest soil of all the Country, it hath been long the ordinary seat of the Governour, and the See of a Bishop, (Suffragan to the Archbishop of Domingo in Hispaniola.) Once suddenly surprized by the English, An. 1595. and burnt to ashes, but as suddenly repaired again. 3 Caravalleda, or Nuestra Sennora de Caravalleda, 80 leagues from Coro towards the East, seated upon the Sea near an unsafe Haven, and defended from assault by the Castle of Caracas, so called from the name of the Tribe in which it standeth. Near unto which the Hills arise to so great an height, that they seem to equal the Pike of Tenariffe so much talked of. 4 S. Jago de Leon, in the same tribe of Caracas, took by the English the same year. 5 Nova Valentia, 25 leagues from S. Jago de Leon, and from Coro 60. 6 New Xeres, lately built, fifteen leagues on the South of Nova Valentia. 7 Nova Segovia, one league only from New Xeres; situate on the banks of Baraguicemiti, the most noted River of this tract. 8 Tucayo, in the Valley so called; not very large, but plentifully loaded with rich Sugar-Canes, for which some Sugar-works, or Ingenios are here lately built. 9 Traxillo, or Nuestra Sennora de la Paz, eighteen leagues on the South of the great Lake of Maracaybo, on which the Inhabitants hereof have a Village which belongs unto it, where they hold a Factory for the sale of their wares. 10 Laguna, on the bottom of the Lake itself; not else observable but for the multitude of Tygers which do haunt about it.

This Country discovered by Columbus, and named by Alfonso de Ojeda, as before is said, was first pretended to for Neighbourhoods-lake, by the Spaniards planted in Cubagna. Afterwards John de Anpuez, by order from the Council resident at Domingo in Hispaniola, was employed in the Discovery of it, Anno 1527. But Charles the fifth having taken up great sums of money of the Vesperi a wealthy Family of Augsburg, pawned this Country to them; by whom Ambrosius Alfinger was sent with 400 foot, and 80 Horses, to take possession. But he and his Successors in that employment, not minding so much the Conquest as the spoil of the Country; the Council of Domingo undertook the business once again; and in the year 1545. sent over one John de Caravaya, who treading in the steps of the Germans, or rather outgoung them in all sorts of Rapine, was outed on a second order by one John Perez de Tolosa, by whom the Province was reduced into some good order. In the year 1550. the Negroes, brought hither in great multitudes out of Africk, began to mutiny; but their Delign discovered, and themselves all slain. Peace and contentment following after all these troubles, the Country was in little time so thoroughly planted, and the Natives so encouraged in their several Tribes, that notwithstanding the destructions made by the Germans and Spaniards, here were reckoned not long since above 100000 of the Salvages, not numbering those above fifty or under eighteen years of Age; who by an Order of the Council of Spain for these parts of America, are exempt from Taxes.

in

3. MARGARITA is an Island situate over against the Salina or Salt-Lake in Cumana; from the Main-land whereof it is distant about seven Leagues. So called from the abundance of Pearls which the Spaniards found at the first Discovery, which the Latinists call Margaritas, and from them the Spaniards. Which though it signifie no other than the Vulgar or common Pearl, yet here were also store of those of the greater estimate, such as the Romans by the figure of the Antiphrasi, called Uniones, because they alwayes grew in couples. Nalli duo reperiuntur indifcreti, saith Pliny; unde nomen Unionum scilicet Romanæ impone re delictæ.

The Isle affirmed to be 16 Leagues in length, and six in breadth; situate under the 11. Degree of Northern Latitude. Well stored with Pearls upon the shores, when first discovered; but even then when most plentifully stored with that Commodity, she had not water of her own to quench her thirst, compelled to fetch it from Cumana. Otherwise plentiful enough both of Maize, and Fruits. The People obsequiously servile to their Lords, the Spaniards; so long accustomed unto bondage, that it is now grown another nature. Places of most importance in it, 1 Monpater, in the East corner of the Island, a Fort of the Spaniards, built for securing their rich Trade of Pearl-fishing, and to defend their ships which lie there at Anchor: within the command whereof is a little Burrough, and the house of the Governour. 2 El valle de Santa Lucia, two Leagues from the Sea, a Spanish Colony. 3 Makanao, the chief Village of the Natives.

This Island first discovered in the third Voyage of Columbus, An. 1498. grew suddenly into great esteem, by reason of the rich Pearl-fishing, which they found on the shores thereof. And in regard the Natives were so ready to betray their Treasures (of which themselves made little reckoning) they found more favour from the Spaniards, and obtained more liberties from the King, than the rest of the Salvages. Inasmuch that the Spaniards either could not or would not compel them to dive into the Sea for Pearl; but bought Negro slaves from Guinea, and the Coasts of Africk, whom they inforced with great Torments to dive into the bottom of the Sea, many times seven or eight Fathom deep, to bring up the shells, in which that Treasure was included: where many of them were drowned, and some maimed with Sharks, and other Fishes. But that rich Trade is much diminished of late, if it fail not quite. The cause thereof to be imputed to the unsatiable avarice of the Spaniards, so greedy upon Pearl, that they destroyed the very Seed, and making gain of whatsoever they could meet with, for a little present profit lost the hopes of the future. The Island less famous, and not much frequented. Visited to its cost in the year 1601. by the English under Captain Parker, who received here 500 l. in Pearls for the ransom of Prisoners; and took a Ship which came from the Coast of Angola, laden with 370 Negroes, to be sold for Slaves.

4. CUBAGNA is an Island lying betwixt Margarita and the Promontory of Aroya upon the Continent; from the first distant but one League, from the other six; it self in compass about three. Rich on the shores, by the abundance of Pearls which were found about them, but very beggerly on the Land. Destitute both of grafs and water, by consequence of Cattel also, except only Conies, and but few of those. So that like many a Gallant who spend all upon the back, and nothing on the belly, she had her out-side laced with Pearls, but within nothing to be found but want and hunger. Their bread and water brought them out of other Countries; and their Fruits too, if they desired to have any; here being very few Trees, and those most of Guaiacum. But so abundant in this Treasure, that the Kings Fifths for many years amounted to 15000 Ducats yearly out of this poor Island.

In this respect it was presently resorted to, and possessed by the Spaniards, who planted here a Colony which they called New Calix: & grew in short time unto so great power, that they made themselves Masters of the Port of Maracayana in Venezuela, one of the best upon those Seas. But in the year 1521. hearing that the Salvages of Cumana had destroyed the Convent of Franciscans on the opposite shore, they cowardly forsook the Island, and fled to Hispaniola. Sent back again by the Council there, under the conduct of James de Castellon, by whom the Town was made more beautiful and strong than ever formerly. In great esteem as long as the Pearl-fishing did continue; now, with that decayed. Yet still the Island doth deserve some consideration, for a Fountain on the East part of it near unto the Sea: continuing, though the Pearls be gone; which yieldeth a Biluminous substance like Oil, Medicinal for diseases, and is found two or three Leagues off, floating on the Sea: more profitable for the good of Mankind, and more easily found than the Pearls which sunk unto the bottom, and maintained our pride.

Four miles from hence, but appendant to it, lieth a little Island called Coches, three miles in compass, but so abundantly stored with Pearls, that it hath been worth in that one commodity for some moneths together, above a thousand pounds a moneth of our English money. First peopled, upon that occasion, An. 1529. but the occasion failing, the Plantation ended, the Isle being now unpeopled; as not worth the looking after.

5. THE LESSER ISLANDS of this Prefecture or Provincial Government, lie all along upon the Coast of Venezuela, from East to West; the principal of which 1 Tortuga, 12 or 14 miles on the West of Margarita; four miles in length, hardly one in breadth; but yielding such good store of Salt, that three or four ships are laden with it every year. Well furnished with Goats and Guyana, but not else considerable: except for being naturally fenced about with Rocks; and yielding a convenient Harbour for the use of Mariners. 2 Catrina, by the English called the Isle of Providente, as the former is by the name of Association; both which being void of all Inhabitants and tame Beasts, were possessed by them about the year 1639, at such time as there was open war between England and Spain; After which, not being claimed by the Spaniards in making up the Peace ensuing, they were granted by King Charles by his Letters Patents under the great Seal of England, to certain Noblemen and Gentlemen, and their Successors, who for the space of 20 years, or thereabouts, have enjoyed them quietly; the Islands being planted by them with their several Colonies, and all things necessary to maintain and enrich the same. 3 Bonaire, opposite to the Bay of Golfo triste, in the Latitude of twelve Degrees; well furnished with Sheep and Goats, and other Cattel brought out of Spain, and peopled with some Savages out of Hispaniola, whom the Spaniards Christened and sent thither: some Spaniards with their Governour intermixt amongst them. The Island 16 miles in compass; not fruitful naturally but in Trees, which are great and numerous. 4 Curacao, nine miles on the West of Bonaire; and as many in compass. Of a more fertile soil by far, and of very rich Pastures: the People given to grazing and make good store of Cheese, transported thence to other places; the Island having toward the North, a convenient Harbour. 5 Aruba, on the North-East of Curacao, from which nine miles distant, in compass not above five miles, for the most part level. One hill it hath (amongst some others) fashioned like a Sugar-loaf. Inhabited by few Savages, and fewer Spaniards.

The other Islands on this Coast, as 1 the Tostigos, lying Eastward of Margarita, 2 Blanca, 3 Orchilla, 4 Rocca, and 5 the Isle of des Aves, or of Birds, interposed betwixt Tortuga and Bonaire; some of them rather Rocks than Islands: few stored with any living creatures for the use of men; and none of them at all with men to manure and dress them, I pass over here: and so proceed from these Islands of the Province of Paria, to those which are subordinate to the Council of S. Domingo, and make a Province of themselves. But first we must go back, and bring up some of the Islands of Mare del Zur, which could not be reduced to any of the former Provinces.

And so much of PERUANA.

OF

OF THE AMERICAN ISLANDS:

And first of those which are in

MARE del ZUR.

THE AMERICAN ISLANDS, scattered up and down the shores of this New World, are commonly divided into those of Mare del Zur, or the Pacific Ocean; and those of the Atlantic, or Mare del Noort. The first so called by Magellanus, the first Discoverer: who passing through those troublesome and tempestuous Streits which now bear this name, found such a change upon his coming into the Main, that he gave it the name of Mare del Zur (quod a tranquillitate vocavit Mare del Sur, saith the Author of the Atlas Minor) from the calm and peaceable temper of it. By the Latines called Mare Pacificum, in the same regard. Called also the Southern Ocean, because of its situation on the Southside of America, in reference to some part of the Gulf of Mexico, and the Streits of Anian. Not known unto the Spaniards till discovered by Nonnius Vasques de Balboa, conducted hither by one of the Catiques or petty Kings of the Country about Nombre di Dios; Who seeing the Spaniards so greedy after Gold, told them that he would bring them to a place where their thirst should be satisfied. Accordingly he brought them to the opposite shore, this Balboa being the chief man in that Adventure: who discovering further on the Sea, opened the way unto Pizarro, and the rest that followed to the golden treasures of Peru: Executed notwithstanding this good service by Don Pedro de Avila, within short time after. But the more full discovery of it is to be ascribed unto Magellanus and some later Adventurers, though the Spaniards got nothing by the bargain. For formerly as long as the Southern Sea was unknown to any but themselves, they conveyed their Gold and treasures from one place to another, from Panama to Peru, from Peru to Panama, without loss or charge, and thought their Ports upon that shore to be unaccessible. But after the way unto this Sea was found out by Magellanus, Drake, Cavendish, and the rest of our English Adventurers did so scour these Coasts, that they left them neither Port nor Ship, which they did not tanck; as hath been evidenced before in some particulars.

As for the Islands of this Sea, they lie most of them so neer the shores, as if placed there by Nature to serve as Outworks to defend the Continent. Many in tale, but few of consideration; and of those few some of the chief have been described already in their proper places, as parts and members of the Province upon which they lie. The residue which lie too far off to come under such consideration, must be mentioned here; and those reduced to these two heads, 1 Los Ladrones, 2 the Islands of John Fernandes.

1. LOS LADRONES are certain Islands situate betwixt the main Land of America and the Philippine Islands, in the Longitude of 185. and the 4 Degree of Northern Latitude. So called by Magellanus who first discovered them, because of the thievery of the Inhabitants (Insula Latronum is their name in Latine) who had stoln his cock-boat, which he was forced by main force to recover from them. And they continue still both their name and nature. Found such by Cavendish and Noort in their several voyages, to whom they came under colour of buying Iron (a commodity which they highly prize) but either closely or openly stealing whatsoever they met with. The people tall of stature, brown of complexion, and inclining to corpulency; extremely active, and good Divers, continuing a long time under the water, as if alike fitted to both Elements; inasmuch as the Hollanders then with Noort, to make trial of it, cast five peices of Iron into the Sea, all fetched out by one of them. The Women as good at it as the men. Both sexes given to filthy and promiscuous lusts; for which branded (many of them) with the marks of their incontinency, the Pox having eaten up both their Lips and their Noses.

Their Religion is worshipping the Devil, whose Images they have in wood on the head of their Boats; the Chappel and the Saints for such devotions. But for the nature of these Islands, and what subjection the Inhabitants of it yield to the King of Spain, I am yet to seek. But like enough they yield as little as some others do, which yet are reckoned by our Authors to be parts of America.

2. The Island of John Fernandes, are two in number: so called from John Fernandes the first Discoverer, Ann. 1574. each of them five or six miles in compass, and about 300 miles distant from the shores of Chile. Situate in the 33 degree of Southern Latitude; rocky and barren, but well wooded, and those woods replenished with Goats, but their flesh not savory as in other places. Some store of Sanders there is in them, and of Palms so scarcity. Plenty of Fish upon the shores, for which cause visited sometimes by the Spaniards lying in Pern: and fitted with commodious Harbours and Roads for shipping, which makes them not neglected by other Nations as they pass this way. None else of note in all this Sea, but such as lie upon the shores of their several Provinces; which we have looked upon already. And therefore passing through the Straits, and coming up unto the Islands of Paria, where before we left; we will now look on those of Mare del Noort, or that part of the Atlantick which washeth the shores of this New world (the reason of which names we have seen before) subordinate to the Counsel or Government of S. Domingo, viz. 1 the Caribes, 2 Porto Rico, 3 Hispaniola, 4 Cuba, and 5 Jamaica. The rest already spoken of in their proper places.

3. THE CARIBES.

THE CARIBES, or Cannibal Islands, are in number many; 27 of them known by their proper names; the rest of less note (though some of these of little enough) not yet so distinguished. Called thus in general, because inhabited by Cannibals and Man-eating people (at their Discovery) as the word Caribes doth import. They lie extended like a Bow from the coast of Paria unto the Isle of Rico Porto: of different temper, as must needs be in such variety; and therefore not within the compass of a general Character. Some of the principal we shall consider more distinctly; and for the rest it will be trouble enough to them, or else pass them by.

1. GRANADA the nearest of this crew to the Main-land of Cumana, is situate in the Latitude of 20 degrees and 15 Minuts; in form like a Crescent or half Moon, the two horns not a mile asunder, the whole length but six. Shaded all over with thick Woods, but notwithstanding of a rich and fruitful soil. A Haven in it of good use, but no Town of note. The people of the same ill condition with the other Savages, but more wit to hide it; most mischievously intended when they seem most kind; and then the more to be avoided.

2. S. VINCENT 18 miles on the North of Granada, is of so blessed a soil, that it brings forth abundance of Sugar-Canes without charge to the Husbandman, watered with many pleasant Rivers, and full of safe and convenient Bays for the use of Mariners. In figure Circular, the Diameter being six miles over; the Circle by consequence eighteen. The people but of mean stature, slothful, and studious only for their Belly: their love to which makes them adventure in their small Boats, hewn out of the body of a Tree, to pass into the Continent, and return again, without help of the Compass; though distant from it at the nearest, above 30 miles.

3. BARBADOS on the North-east of S. Vincent in the Latitude, of 13 Degrees, and 20 Minutes. Of an Oval form 17 or 18 miles in compass. The soil in shew like that of England, but far more fruitful: on the East-side thrusting out it self with Points and Angles, which yield some Bays, but full of Quick-sands, and unsafe for shipping, on the South furnished with a large and commodious Harbour. Not very well provided for Fruits or Cattel, till made a Colony of the English; who have brought thither from their own Country, Swine and Kine; Oranges, and the like from others. The chief Commodity made hitherto of this Plantation, comes by the planting of Tobacco; and by a kind of course Sugar called Barbadoes Sugar, which must be quickly spent, or will melt to nothing. Were they in stock, and not forced to make a quick return of their Commodities, they might make here as good Sugars as in other places. Yet this Plantation said to be worth all the rest which are made by the English; who (as I take it) are the sole Colony in the Island: but at the courties of the Spaniard; without whose leave and liking not of force to hold it.

4. MANTININO on the North-west of the Barbados, by the Savages called Mandanimam, with little difference. Everywhere swelled with Hills, of which three most eminent for height: one of them, which way soever a man looks upon it, carrying the resemblance of an Hut. Inhabited in the time of Peter Martyr the Historian, with none but Women: afterwards with a more fierce and barbarous people than the rest of these Islands: but neither Men or Women to be seen of late: whether destroyed, or removed further from the shores for fear of their destruction, is a thing uncertain.

5. DOMINICA, seated on the North of Mantinino, twelve leagues in length; exceeding fruitful of Tobacco, which they sell unto the Europeans for Hatchets, Knives, and other Instruments of Iron. Famed for two Fountains of Hot-water, and a commodious Haven at the West-side of it, into which falleth a River 20 paces broad. The people as barbarous as ever Cannibals or Man-eaters to this very day: At deadly enmity with the Spaniards, and to no man trusty, but where they cannot hurt, or dare not. Both sexes wear their hair long, and colour their bodies over with Oaker. Yet bloody and barbarous though they be, they are ruled by a King of their own, distinguished from the rest in his dress or habit, whom they most readily obey.

6. DESSEADA, or the Land of Desire, on the North-east of Dominica, discovered by Columbus in his second Voyage; naked of Trees, and at the first sight afar off, not unlike a Galley. Of great use to the Spaniards, who always take it in their way from the Canaries to these parts of America, and back again at their return.

The Porto Rico.

The like use do they make of 7. The Isle of GUADALUPE, parallel to this, but directly Westward: at which the Fleets which come from Spain use to take fresh water, and there disperse themselves to their several Ports. Eight miles in length, and of good Anchorage in most parts of the Sea adjoining. North-east from hence lieth

8. S. Maria del Antigua, commonly called ANTIGUA only, and by some mistakingly ANTEGO. Seven leagues in length, and as much in breadth; difficult of access, and destitute of fresh water, but well replenished of woods, and provided of Fens. Of late times made a Colony of the English, who do still possess it.

9. S. CHRISTOPHER, on the North-west of Guadalupe in the Latitude of 17 Degrees and 20 Minuts. The length six miles, the breadth in many places four, and in some but two: much swelled with hills, and towards the East provided of several Salt-wiches. The French and English had sometimes in it several Colonies: by whom the Natives were destroyed, or otherwise compelled to forsake their dwellings; convicted, as was pretended, of some manifest treacheries. But the two Colonies did not long enjoy the sole possession; ejected by Frederick de Toledo, as he passed this way with his Navy; though suffered to return to their former dwellings, as rather profitable then dangerous to the Crown of Spain. Their chief employment and commodity lies in their Tobacco, by some much commended. Joining hereto, or but a league from it at the most, is

10. The Isle of NIEVE, affirmed to be five leagues in compass; well wooded, and as pleasantly watered; inasmuch as the Inhabitants of the Isle of Dominica used to come thither for their pleasures, but for hunting chiefly. Now famed for some Bathes or Hot-waters, found out by the English, who in the year 1528. placed a Colony in it. But whether substituting of it self, or a part of their Plantation in S. Christophers, I am yet to learn.

11. SANCTA CRUX, by the Inhabitants called Ayns, on the North-west of S. Christophers, and the South-east of Porto Rico, from which last distant 15 leagues. Woody and mountainous; not well provided of fresh waters; but on the West-side furnished with a safe and commodious Road, under the covert of the Mountains. Amongst their fruits some that resemble a green Apple; which tasted, so inflames the tongue, that for 24 hours it swelleth in so great extremity, as makes it altogether useless, but after that by little and little it abates again. The like hapneth also to the face, if washed before Sun-rising with their Fen-waters, which are very frequent in this Island; after the rising of the Sun, without any harm at all. In this there is a Colony of the English also, but of later standing then those of S. Christophers, and Barbados.

Some of the principal of the rest, 1 Anguilla, 2 Barbada, 3 S. Bartholomews, 4 S. Lucies, 5 S. Martins, 6 Montserrat, 7 Rotunda, 8 Saba, 9 Virgo Gorda, & 10 Smilero; of which we have little but the names: the rest, though known by several names, are not worth the naming. Only we are to add concerning the whole Nation of Caribes, once here inhabiting, that they did usually hunt for Men, as Men for Beasts, roving as far as Porto Rico to seek after their prey; and what they caught, was sure to go to the pot, in the worst sense too. Columbus, when he was at the Isle of Guadalupe, found 30 Captive Children which were reserved to be eaten, and in their houses divers vessels filled with Man's flesh, and some upon the Spit ready to be roasted. Nor had they laid aside this diet, till after the year 1564. but how long I know not: For at that time a Spanish ship coming to water at the Isle of Dominica; they cut her Cables in the night, haled her to the land, and devoured all that were in her. But the Islands have been of late times well cleared of those Monsters; some of them brought unto better order, but the most destroyed as the common Enemies of mankind; the Islands where they dwell being either totally deserted, or taken up by the Europeans and their several Colonies.

2 PORTO RICO: And 3 MONICO.

PORTO RICO lyeth on the North-west of Sancta Crux, from which distant about 15 leagues, and near upon as many from Hispaniola, 136 leagues from the main Land of Paria, and not much less from the Cape of Coguibaco in Rio de la Hacha, a Province of Castilla Aurea. It took this name from the chief Town and Haven of it; but was called by Columbus at the first discovery S. Johannis Isola, or the Isle of St. Johns; by the Natives Boriquen.

It is situate under the 18 and 19 Degrees of Northern Latitude; in form quadrangular, but of a greater length then breadth, such as the Geometricians call oblongum: The length hereof being 30 leagues, and the breadth but 20. The Air hereof very pleasant and temperate, not scorched with furious heats in Summer, nor made offensive by the fall of continual rains; exposed sometimes (chiefly in August, and September) to the troublefomeness of sudden tempests, called Hericanos. The soil indifferently fruitful, though somewhat mountainous: here being (besides other Hills of inferior note) a ridge of high Hills which run cross the Country from the one end unto the other. Their chief commodities Sugar-canes, Ginger, Cassia, and great store of Hides; the Europeans Cattle having so abundantly increased, that they kill thousands for their skins, leaving the flesh to be a prey unto Dogs and Birds. Some Mines here were of Gold and Silver, but consumed long since. And so are all the Natives also; of whom, in that respect, impertinent to give any Character.

Chief

Hispaniola.

Chief Rivers of the Island, 1 Cairobon, 2 Boyaman: of divers fountains, and of several and divided courses. 3 Luyfa, & 4 Ton, two Rivers growing out of one. The Spring of that one in the Mountains of Mayamo, whence running Northwards in one Channel 16 leagues together, doth afterwards divide it self into those two streams. 5 Guiano, 6 Arczibo, 7 Guadiabo, of lesser note; but all of them, as well as all the rest before, concluding in some safe and capacious Haven.

Places of most importance in it, 1 Porto Rico the chief Town, built in a little Island, on the North side of the greater, but joynted unto it with huge piles, and vault expences, by the command of Philip the first, An. 1504. Well built, with large streets, and convenient houses, according to the model of the Cities of Spain, and beautified with a fair Cathedral; the Bishop one of the Suffragans of the Archbishop of S. Domingo in Hispaniola. The Town unwall'd, but fortified with two strong Castles: the one of which secures the Haven, and the other the Town. In vain attempted, and with the loss of 40 or 50 men, by Sir Francis Drake, An. 1595. but taken two years after by George Earl of Cumberland, who had a purpose to have peopled it with an English Colony. Discouraged from it by the death of 400 of his men, by change of Air, and some intemperance of Diet; he set sail for England, doing no other hurt to the Town or Island, but the disfiguring it of 70 piece of Ordnance, and some part of their treasure, which he brought home with him. 2 S. Germans, in the Western part of the Island, but four leagues from the Sea; once the chief of the Island, now both unfortified and small, 3 Arczibo, on the River so called. 4 Luyfa, the most noted Port of the Eastern parts, situate on the mouth of the River so named.

Eastward hereof betwixt it and Hispaniola, lies the Island of Mona, (might not this think we be so called by Madoc ap Owen Gwynedd, of whom before?) three leagues in compass; rocky and of a brackish earth; but fit for the production of Limons, Oranges, and such kind of fruit, which are here in plenty. Not far off, but more towards the West, Monico, or Monetta, as our English call it, where they found such infinite store of Fowl, that they flew over their heads as thick as hail, and made them almost deaf with the very noise; their Eggs so thick upon the ground, that they loaded two boats with them in three hours, and could hardly pass forwards without treading on them.

But to return to Porto Rico, or the Isle of St. Johns, it was touched upon by Columbus in his second voyage, An. 1493. but first inhabited by John Ponce de Leon, An. 1510. who being courteously entertained by Aguabana, the chief Prince thereof, planted a Colony of Spaniards in the North part of the Island, which he called Caparra. The Colony ten years after that removed to Guanica, and from thence to S. Germans: carrying with it the repute of the chief Town of all the Island, upon every remove till the building of Porto Rico, where it since hath fixed. The Island very populous for the bigness of it, when the Spaniards came to it: but the Natives long ago consumed by several Butcheries; and as some write, not above 1500 Spaniards in all the Country. What else concerns the story of it, we have seen before.

HISPANIOLA.

HISPANIOLA lyeth on the West of Porto Rico; the distance we have seen already. By the Inhabitants called Haity, and by some Quisqua; but by Columbus it was honoured with the name of Hispaniola, or little Spain; and of late times beginneth to be called S. Domingo, from the chief Town of it.

The form thereof Triangular, extended in a sharp Angle, called Cabo del Enganno, towards Porto Rico: the Western end fashioned like a Bay, or Semicircle; the Northern point of which is named S. Nicholas; the Southern, Cabo de Donna Maria. The length affirmed to be 150 Leagues, the breadth in some places 60, in some but 30, thence growing less and less till it come unto the Eastern Angle; the whole compass estimated at 400. Situate betwixt the 18 and 20 Degrees of Northern Latitude. Of an Air much infested with Morning-heats, but cooler in the Afternoon by the constant blowing of a Sea-gale, which they there call Virson.

The Country for the most part beautiful and flourishing; the Trees always in their Summer-livery, and the Meadows green, as if it did enjoy a perpetual Spring. In many places swelled with high craggie Mountains, whence the name of Hayty, that word so signifying in the natural language of the Natives. Of such an excellent herbage, that the Cattel brought thither out of Spain have increased almost beyond Arithmetic; grown wilde for want of proper Owners; and hunted unto death like the Stags of the Forrest, though only to rob them of their skins. The soil so fertile, that in the space of sixteen dayes Herbs and Roots will grow ripe, and be fit to be eaten. So plentifully stored with Ginger, and Sugar-canes, that in the year 1587, there were shipped hence 27500. pound weight of Ginger, and 900. Chefts of refined Sugar; an evident argument of the riches and fertility of it. A further proof hereof may be, the rich Mines of Gold, in which they used to find Gold without mixture of dross or other metals. 2 The great increase of Sugar, one Cane here filling twenty, sometimes thirty measures. 3 The wonderful yield of Corn, amounting in some places to an hundred fold. But the Mines were long ago exhausted, inasmuch as the Inhabitants are fain to use brass Money: but instead of those of Gold, they have found out others of Brass and Iron, and some few of Silver; but not much searched into of late for want of Workmen.

The reason of that want to be ascribed unto the Covetousness and Cruelty of the Spanish Nation: who out of an insatiable thirst for Gold, consumed the people in their Mines; and out of the like thirst for Blood, killed so many of them, that in few years they destroyed three Millions of the Natives. And it is probably supposed, that had not Charles the 5. restrained them by a Penal Edict from compelling pulling the Natives against their wills to those works of servitude, there had not been one Native left in all this Island, nor in any other part of their Plantations. Such as are left, are said to be of low stature, of black hair, and a complexion somewhat inclining to that colour: not differing in manners, habit, or Religion from the Spaniards there.

Rivers of most note, 1 Ozama, on whose Banks stands Domingo, the chief Town of the Island, capable of the greatest ships to the very Wharf. 2 Nigua, which passing through the rich Pastures, or making the Pastures rich, by its secret virtue; runneth towards the West: as do also, 3 Yaguimo, 4 Nizao, and 5 Neyba, 6 Hayna, of a contrary course to the other three. 7 Tapi, or Jacho, which falleth into the Northern Seas. 8 Nicayagu, 9 Cocitecnica, 10 Xunigue. These three last famous heretofore for their Sands of Gold. Some speak of 30000 Brooks and Rivers, which are found in this Country; two parts of which vast number had their Golden Sands. A thing so far beyond the charity of the strongest Faith, (though reported by a grave and Reverend Author) that I know not what interpretation to put upon it, except every Water-course, Ditch, and Gutter, may be reckoned in.

The whole divided, when the Spaniards first came amongst them, into several Provinces or Kingdoms; as 1 Higuey, 2 Jaguagua, 3 Samana, in the Eastern parts. 4 Yaguimo, 5 Boaruco, and 6 Xaragua, towards the South. 7 Guababo, and 8 Cabaya, in the West: and in the North, 9 Cibao, rich in Mines of Gold; 10 Maricao. The Landing place of Columbus; and 11 Maguana in the center of the Island, the King whereof in the time of Columbus was named Canabo, of greatest power of any of those petty Royalties. Another division of it hath been made by Nature, parting it by four Rivers, all rising from one Mountain in the midst of the Island into four Divisions: the River Jacho running towards the North; 2 Nubiba hasting to the South; 3 Tuna, or Juna towards the East; and 4 Hatibonico to the West. But these divisions being long since grown out of use, we will survey the chief of the Towns and Cities of it, as they come before us.

And they are 1 S. Domingo, first built by Bartholomew Columbus, An. 1494. on the East bank of the Ozama; and afterwards (in the year 1502.) removed by Nicholas de Obando, then Governour of the Island to the opposite shore. Situate in a pleasant Country, amongst wealthy Pastures, and neighboured with a safe and capacious Haven: the houses elegantly built, most of them of stone, and the whole well walled, beside a Castle at the West end of the Peer to defend the Haven: enriched by the residence of the Governour, the Courts of Justice, the See of an Archbishop (and besides many Convents and Religious houses) an Hospital endowed with 20000 Ducats of yearly Rent. Esteemed of greatest Trade and concourse of Merchants till the taking of Mexico, and the Discovery of Pern; since that time sensibly decaying; and now reduced unto the number of 600 Families of Spaniards: the greatest part of the City, and all the Suburbs, inhabited by Negros, Mulatos, and other Strangers. Not yet recovered of the hurt it had by Sir Francis Drake, who in the year 1586. took it by force, and held it for the space of a month, burning the greatest part of the houses, and suffering the rest to be redeemed at a certain price. 2 St. Salvador, 28 leagues to the East of Domingo. 3 Jaguana, called also Sancta Maria del Porto, from a safe and beautiful Haven adjoining to it; situate in the West part of the Island, of no great bigness, consisting of no more than 150 houses, when it was at the greatest; but made much less by Captain Newport, who in the year 1591. burnt it to the ground. 4 Cotny, in the North of the Island, opposite to S. Domingo, from which distant almost 60 leagues: a little Town, but formerly of great esteem for its Mines of Gold. 5 Concepcion de la Vega, the foundation of Christopher Columbus, for whose sake afterwards adorned with a See Episcopal. 6 Puerto de la Plata, 40 leagues from Domingo on the Northern shore, where built on a commodious Bay by Nicholas de Obando before mentioned, by whom also fortified: the second Town of Wealth and Trade in all the Island. 7 Acua, now called Compofella, a noted Haven, and resorted to for Sugars, which it yields abundantly.

This Island was first discovered by Columbus (for I believe not that it was any of the fortunate Islands which we read of in the life of Sertorius) in the first voyage which he made: conducted thither by some of the Inhabitants of the Isle of Cuba: Landing, and gaining the good will of the Savages, by gentle usage, he obtained leave of one of their Kings or Caciques to build a Fortrefs in his Country, which he called Navidad, or Natividad leaving in it 36 Spaniards to keep possession: whom he found both mastered and murdered at his coming back. Being now better furnished for a new Plantation, he built the Town called Isabella, (in honour of Isabella Queen of Castile) near the Mines of Cibao; which afterwards was deserted also, and the Colony removed unto S. Domingo: the Spaniards sending one Colony after another, till at last their number was increased to 14000. besides women and children. But having rooted out the Natives by their infinite cruelties, and exhausted the riches of the Country with as infinite covetousness, they betook themselves to fresher Quarries, abandoning the Island to devour the Continent. Once had the Islanders rebelled, and fortified themselves in the Province of Boaruco; a place so naturally strong, that there was little need of the helps of Art. Not brought to leave that fastness but on such conditions as made the Spaniards less insolent, and themselves less slaves.

CUBA.

CUBA lyeth on the West of Hispaniola, from which parted by a Frith or narrow Channel, interposed betwixt the two Capes of S. Nicholas, and that of Maya, Backed on the North with a frie of Islands, called the Lucas, and some part of the Peninsula of Florida; extended towards the East to the extrem extrem point or Foreland of Jucuman, called Cape de Cotoche, from which distant about 50 Leagues, and neighboured on the South with the Isle of Jamaica.

Cuba.

It is in length from East to West, that is to say, from Cape Mexic towards Hispaniola, to the Cape of St. Anthony, 230 Leagues; in breadth where broadest hardly 40, but fifteen in others. For the fertility of the Soil contending with Hispaniola for the preeminence; but in the temperature of the Air a great deal before it. Liberally stored with Ginger, Cassia, Mistle, Aloes, Cinnamon and Sugar, (not reckoning such commodities as are common unto this with others) besides great plenty of Flesh, and Fish; and of Fowl no scarcity. The Gold more droffie in the Mine, then in Hispaniola, but the Brass more perfect, Hilly, and full of lofty Mountains; but those Mountains clad with divers trees, some of which drop the purest Rosin, and the Hills sending to the Valleys many notable Rivers. Pestered with many sorts of Serpents; not so much out of any ill condition of the Soil and Air, as by an old Superstition of the Savages: in former times not suffered to kill them when they might (this being a dish reserved for the higher Powers) nor able afterwards to destroy them when it would have been suffered.

What other Savage Rites they had, is not now material, the Spaniards having took an Order that they should not trouble us in that particular. Yet thus much we may add in memory of the first Inhabitants, that an old man of 80 years, one of the Caciques of the Island, addressed himself unto Columbus at his first coming hither, advising him to use his Fortune with moderation, and to remember that the faults of men have two journeys when they leave this world; the one foul and dark, prepared for the injurious and cruel person; the other delectable and pleasant for the men of peace. It is said also of them they knew not the use of money, nor understood the niceties of Meum and Tuum: Tenants in common to the blessings which the earth brought forth, and Cobbers of Nature.

Amongst the Rarities of this Island, they mention a Fountain out of which floweth a pitchy substance, which is found frequently on the Seas into which it falleth, excellent for the Calking of ships: Secondly, a Navigable River (but the name not told us) the waters of which were so hot, that a man could not endure to hold his hand in them. They tell us also thirdly, of a Valley 15 Leagues from S. Jago, which produceth Stones exactly round, as if made for pleasure; but yet merely natural. But these no greater produceth Stones exactly round, as if made for pleasure; but yet merely natural. But these no greater Rarities then in other places: nor altogether so great as in Hispaniola. Of which they tell us of a fair River, whose waters are salt, and yet none but fresh streams fall into it: Of another Lake (three leagues in compass) on the top of the Mountains, into which many Rivers were known to run without any Exit. Neither of these so strange or rare as the Cucuyo, a kind of Scarabe or Beetle: the eyes and wings whereof when opened give so great a light, in the darkest places, that a man may see to read and write by it, as well as by a Candle.

Rivers of most note, 1 Cante, much annoyed with Crocodiles (a Beast not common in these Islands, nor elsewhere in this) exceeding dangerous to such as repose themselves on the Banks of the River. 2 Arimao, which disburtheneth it felt neer the Port of Xagua. 3 Ria de Porcos, full of Rocks and quicksands, at the entrances of it. 4 Rio Escondida, passing betwixt Habana, and the Port of Marcana. 5 Marien, and 6 Tanne, of less note: Besides these there is Xagua, a safe Station and Road for shipping; of a narrow entrance, but large and spacious when once entered, above ten Leagues in length, and of breadth proportionable. So fenced on all sides from the winds, that ships lie here in safety without any Anchor. Some other Bays there be as useful, though not so considerable.

Towns of most consequence, 1 S. Jago in the South part of the Island, situate about two leagues from the Main, but in the bottom of a large and capacious Gulf, the most noted Port of all these Seas. Built by Don Diego de Velasquez, An. 1514. Afterwards made a Bishops See, beautified with a Cathedral; some Religious houses; once not inferior unto any for numbers of People, though now few enough. 2 Baracao, 30 leagues on the East of S. Jago, the same Foundation as the other; and neighboured by great quantities of Eben-wood. 3 Salvador, by some called Baymo, according to the old name of the Province in which it standeth; built by Velasco in the most pleasant and richest part of all the Island; but not so fitly, as the other, for Trade and Merchandise. 4 Porto del Principe, an Haven Town in the North parts: not far from which is the Fountain of a pitchie or bituminous liquor, spoken of before; which I conceive to be much of the same nature with the Fountains of Naphia in the East. 5 Trinidad, another of Velasco's foundations, nine or ten leagues Eastward of the Port of Xagua: once well frequented, but now forsaken, and meer nothing. 6 Havana in the North parts, opposite to Florida, a noted and well traded Port; so strongly situate and fortified both by Nature and Art, that it seems impregnable. The Entrances defended with two notable Castles; a greater then either opposite to the mouth of the Haven; all so commodiously built, and well planted with Ordnance, that they are able to keep out and scatter the greatest Navy. Neer one of them standeth an high Tower, from the top whereof notice is given unto the Guards, of every ship that cometh within view of the Watchmen. The best assurance not only of this Island but the Bay of Mexico; and therefore honoured for the most part with the seat of the Governour, and the greatest Trade of all these Seas: the Ships which are bound for Spain from all parts of the Gulf, carrying here for one another, till all meet together, and setting sail from hence by the Streits of Bahama, amongst the Isles of the Ducais.

This Island one of the first which was discovered by Columbus: who having almost tired the Spaniards with the expectation, first fell upon the Island of Guanamani, one of the Lacair, to which he gave the name of S. Saviour. From thence he sailed to Baracao, on the North of this Island, which he caused to be called Fernandina, in honour of Ferdinand the Catholic, King of Castile and Aragon; at whose charge and the encouragement of Isabella his Heroick Queen, he pursued this enterprise. Landing, he asked the People if they knew Cipango (by which name Paulus Venetus calls the Isle of Japan) and they conceiving that he enquired after Cibao (of great note for the richest Mines in Hispaniola) pointed towards Haiti;

Jamaica.

Haiti; some of them going with him to conduct him thither. Cuba by this means laid aside, and all the thoughts of Spain upon Hispaniola, where they found many golden provocations to invite their stay; till hungering after more Gold, and some new Plantations, they passed over hither: and in few years by the prudent conduct of Velasco, got such footing in it, and made that footing good by so many Colonies; that their title and possession was beyond dispute; and so continued to this day.

6. JAMAICA.

JAMAICA lyeth on the South of Cuba, from which distant 20 leagues; and as much, or very little more from Hispaniola. Discovered in the second voyage of Columbus, by whom named S. Jago; that name changed afterwards to Jamaica.

It is in length from East to West about 50 leagues, and in breadth 20. the whole compass estimated at 150: the middle of it under the 18 Degree of Northern Latitude. Of a rich Soil; abundantly provided of all things necessary: well stocked with Cattle, and no less plentifully stored with most sorts of Fruits, which either Industry or Nature have supplied it with. Great store of Cotton-wool; and such abundance of Guacas, (a Root whereof the Savages once made their bread) that it was deemed the Granary of the neighbouring Island. And were it not disurnished of convenient Ports (which is all the want of it) would be as much frequented by Sea-faring men, as any other in those parts. Once very populous, now destitute of all the natural Inhabitants: this Island, and that of Porto Rico, losing in few years 60000 by the Spaniards cruelties. Cruelties which not only raged upon the men, but destroyed posterity: the Women, here and elsewhere so abominating their sad condition, that they strangled their Children in the birth, to the end they might not live to serve such a cruel Nation.

Chief Towns hereof (for though it be well watered, it hath no great Rivers) 1 Sevilla, in the North-part of the Island, beautified with a goodly Monastery, the Abbot whereof hath all Episcopal jurisdiction, and is privileged to wear a Miter; in nothing more enabled, then that Peter Martyr the Historian (to whose Decades all succeeding Ages are to be beholding, for the Chorography, and History of these parts of the World) was once Abbot here. 2 Melilla, a small Town, but memorable for the unfortunate shipwreck of Columbus, on the shores adjoining. 3 Oristan, on the South of the Island, fourteen leagues from Sevil. 4 De la Vega, now a ruine only, once a Spanish Colony; and of great fame for giving the title of Dukes to Christopher Columbus, and his brother Bartholomew. Since whole time nothing hapned prejudicial to the State of this Island by the hands of any but the Spaniards; till conquered, but not held, by Sir Anthony Shirley, An. 1596.

Thus having took a short Survey of the several parts of this great Body; we now briefly take a view of the Government and Forces of it. The Government committed chiefly to two great Vice-Royes, the one of Nova Hispania, who resides at Mexico; the other of Peru, who abideth at Lima; the principal Cities of those Kingdoms. The first hath jurisdiction over all the Provinces of Nova Galicia, Nova Hispania, Guatimala, Castella Aurea, and the Prov'nces of the Mexican Islands; the other over those of Peru, Chile, Rio de la Plata, and the new Realm of Granada. Such scattered pieces as they hold in Guiana, Paria, and the Caribes, with their Forts in Florida, being reduced to some of these. Of these the Vice-Roy of Peru is of greatest power, because he hath the nomination of all the Commanders and Officers within his Government: which in the other are reserved to the King himself. But that of New Spain counted for the better preferment, because of its nearness unto Spain (in respect of the other) the beauties of the City of Mexico, and the Civilities of the People. For the administration of Justice, and ordering the Affairs of the several Provinces, there are ten chief Courts, from which there lieth no Appeal: that is to say, 1 Guadalajara, for Gallicia Nova. 2 Mexico, for New Spain. 3 S. Domingo, for the Province of the Islands. 4 Guatimala, for the division so named. 5 Panama, for Castella Aurea. Then for the other Government, Quito, Lima, and Charcas, in the Realm of Peru. 9 Imperiale, for Chile. 10 S. Foy, for the new Realm of Granada. From these, though no Appeal do lie in matter of Justice; yet both from them and the two Vice-Royes an Appeal may lie in affairs of State, or point of Grievance. And to this end there is a standing Council in the Court of Spain, which is called the Council of the Indies, consisting of a President, eight Counsellors, two Proctors, Fiscal (which we call the Solicitors General) and two Secretaries, besides other Officers: to whom it appertaineth to take care of all matters which concern the Government of these Countries; to appoint the Vice-Royes, to dispose of all the great offices (except those of the Government of Peru) and spiritual Dignities; to appoint Vissers to go into those Provinces for the examining the actions of all Officers, hearing the grievances of the People, and to displace or punish as they find occasion; but with the Kings privy and consent.

As for the Estates of private men, they which hold Lands or Royalties from the Crown of Spain, hold them but for life (except it be the Marquess of Valla in New Spain, of the race of Cortez) after their deaths returning to the King again; who gives them commonly to the eldest son, or the next of blood; but so that they receive it as a mark of his favour, and not for any right of theirs. And though they have many times attempted to make these Commanderies and Estates hereditary, and offered great sums of money for it, both to Charles the fifth, and Philip the second; yet they could never get it done; the Kings most prudently considering, that these great Lords having the command of the Estates and Persons of their several Passals, would either grinde them into powder without any remedy; or upon any Inquisition into their proceedings, take an occasion to revolt. Both dangers of no small importance, both by this uncertainty of their present Tenure, exceeding happily avoided.

The Revenue which the King receiveth hence, is said to be three Millions of Ducats yearly: most of it rising out of the Fifths of the Mines of Gold and Silver: the rest by Customs upon Manufactures.

Jamaica.

factures and all sorts of Merchandise, and the Acknowledgments reserved upon Lands and Royalties. But out of this there goeth great Exits, that is to say, to the two Vice-roys 12000 Ducats; to the President and Officers of the Council of the Indies in Spain 20000 Ducats; to the Judges and Officers of the several Courts of Judicature very liberal Pensions; to every Archbishop and Bishop, of which there are 29 in all, 2000 Ducats at the least, and to some much more to mend their Benefices. Then reckoning in the infinite charges, in maintaining Garrisons, and entertaining standing Bands both of Horse and Foot, in several parts of this Estate; and the continual keeping of a strong Armada, to conduct his Plate Fleets to Spain, there must be made a great abatement, and the sum will bear it. For howsoever at the first his Revenue came from thence without any great charge more than the keeping a few Souldiers to awe the Savages; yet after he fell fowl with England, and startled the Hollanders to a Rebellion, he was compelled to fortifie all his Havens, and secure his Ports, and to maintain a strong Armada at the Sea to Convoy his Treasures. Before which time, the English (as is instanced in several places) did so share in his Harvest, that they left him scarce enough to pay his Workmen; which if they should attempt again upon any breach, they would find it very difficult, if not impossible, to effect any thing on the Coasts, as in former times; or indeed any other way but by making themselves too strong for him at Sea, and thereby either intercept his Fleets, or hinder them from coming to him to supply his needs.

And so much for the AMERICAN Islands.

Having thus travelled over (with Gods blessing) the known parts of the World, and sailed through the most difficult Seas which embrace the same: we should now man our Barque again, and try what discovery we can make of the Parts unknown, or not so fully known to us as the others are.

That is to say,

But whether goes my Bark? Return, for we Have sliced the capering Brine enough; see, see,
The Southwind 'gins to gather clouds apace,
'Tis no safe tarrying in so fierce a place.
While thou hast time retire thou wearied Bark
Into safe Harbour; when the clouds which dark
The Worlds bright eye shall be dispelled away,
And shining Phœbus make a lightsome day,
Tritons shrill Trump shall thee recal again,
From the safe Harbour to the foaming main;
And we with all our powers will boldly try,
What of this UNKNOWN WORLD we can decry.

TO THE FORMER WORK;

Endeavouring a Discovery of the UNKNOWN PARTS of the WORLD.

AND here we are upon a new and strange adventure, which no Knight Errant ever undertook before. Of things unknown, as there is commonly no delire, so less discourse can probably be made upon them. By unknown therefore we must understand less known, or not well discovered; and in that sense we may as well endeavour to say somewhat of them, as others with more pains and hazard to attempt the discovery. And to say truth, even in the known parts of the world there is much unknown; as in the best and most flourishing Kingdoms of the Earth there is some waste ground, either not cultivated at all, or not so well inhabited as the rest of the Country. For besides many vast tracts of ground in the North and North-west parts of Tartary, and such parts of India as lie Northwards towards Delangher, Nangroor, the East parts of Caucasus, and the Realms of Cathay; it is conceived that the greatest part of the midlands of Africk are undiscovered to this day, or the knowledge of them so imperfect as comes near a nescience. And for America, not reckoning in the Northern Borders (which are in part to be the subject of this enquiry) it is affirmed of the Mid-lands by John de Laet (who hath made the most exact description of it that ever was extant) Minima sui parte perlustratum esse, that the least part of them hath been discovered hitherto to any purpose. Leaving these therefore as before, without further search, we will divide the UNKNOWN WORLD into these two parts, 1 Terra Incognita Borealis, and 2 Terra Incognita Australis; which with their subdivisions we will now pursue.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS.

TERRA INCOGNITA BOREALIS is that part of the Unknown World which lieth towards the North; and is to be considered in these three notions. 1 As directly under the Pole, which for distinctions sake we will call Orbis Arcticus; 2 As lying to the North-east on the back of Europe and Asia; or 3 on the North-west, on the back of America.

1 ORBIS ARCTICUS is that part of Terra Borealis Incognita, which lyeth under or about the Arctic Pole; the situation and dimensions of which being taken with the Astralabe by an Oxford Friar, are by Mercator thus described out of the Itinerary of James Cnoxe of Boks le due, or the Bosche, a Town of Brabant.

"Under the Arctic Pole (saith he) is said to be a black Rock of wondrous height, about 33 leagues in compass, the Land adjoining being torn by the Sea into four great Islands. For the Ocean violently breaking thorow it, and disgorging it self by 19 Channels, maketh four Euripi, or fierce Whirl-pools, by which the waters are finally carried toward the North, and there swallowed into the Bowels of the Earth. That Euripus or Whirl-pool which is made by the Scythick Ocean hath five Inlets, and by reason of his streight passage, and violent course, is never frozen: the other on the back of Greenland, being 37 leagues long, hath three inlets, and remaineth frozen three moneths yearly. Between these two there lieth an Island on the North of Lappia and Biarmia, inhabited as they say by Pygmies, the tallest of them not above four foot high. A certain Scholar of Oxford reporteth, that these four Euripi are carried with such furious violence towards some Gulf, in which they are finally swallowed up, that no ship is able with never so strong a Gale to stem the Current, and yet that there is never so strong a wind as to blow a Windmill. The like reported by Giraldus Cambrensis in his Book De mirabilibus Hibernie. So far and to this purpose he. But Blundeville our Countryman is of another opinion nion, as indeed who not?) neither believing that Pliny or any other of the Roman Writers came hither to describe this Promontory: or that the Oxford Friar, without the assistance of some cold Devil of the middle Region of the Air (and consequently able to endure all weathers) could approach so near as to measure these cold Countries with his Astralabe, or take the height of this Black Rock with his Jacob's Staff. Leaving this therefore as more fit for Lucians Dialogues, than any serious discourse, we will proceed to matters of more truth and certainty.

2. The NORTH-WEST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis, are those which lie on the back of Estotiland, the most Northern Province of America: by which it hath been much endeavoured to find out a passage to Cathay and China, and not to go so far about as either by the Cape of Good Hope, or the Straights of Magellan. Attempted first by Sebastian Cabot, An. 1497. at the charge of Henry the 7. of England. But having discovered as far as to the 67 Degree of Northern Latitude, by the mutinie of his Mariners he was forced to return; where finding great preparations for a War with Scotland, that business for the present was laid aside. Refused by Gasper Cortezius a Portugal, An. 1500. and after by Stephen Gomez a Spaniard, in the year 1525. but neither of them went so far to the North as Cabot. The Spaniards notwithstanding would not to give over, but first with 5 ships from the Groyne, and afterwards by two from New Spain, sent out by Cortez, pursued the enterprise, which proving as successful as the former had been, occasioned Charles the 5. then preparing for Italy, on the payment of 35000 Ducats by King John the third, to suspend the prosecution of it. Followed with greater industry, but as bad success by Sir Martin Frobisher, who made three Voyages for this purpose (the first of them in the year 1579.) and brought home some of the Natives: a Sea Unicorns horn (still kept in the great Wardrobe of Windfor Castle) and a great deal of the Ore of that Country, found upon trial, when in England, not to quit the cost. A great Promontory which he called Queen Elizabeth's Foreland, in whose name he took possession of it; and the Sea running not far off, he called Frobisher's Straights. The Seas full set with Ice Islands, some of them half a mile about, and 80 Fathoms above water; the people like the Samoids, the worst kind of Tartars, in their lives and habit. John Davies followed the design, Anno 1585. at the encouragement of Sir Francis Walsingham, then principal Secretary of Estate; and having in three Voyages discovered to the Latitude of 73 by reason of the many difficulties which he found in the enterprise, and the death of Mr. Secretary, he was fain to give over; leaving unto a narrow Sea on the North of Estotiland, the name of Fretum Davies, in the Latitude of 65 and 20 Minutes, by which name still called. After him followed Weymouth, Hall, Hudson, Buison, Baffin, Smith, all English. The result of whose endeavours was the finding of some cold Isles and points of Land, which they named King James his Cape, Queen Anne Cape, Prince Henries Foreland, Saddle Island, Barren Island, Red-goose Island, Digges his Island; all of them betwixt 80 and 81. and the imposing on some passages and parts of the Sea, the names of Hackings Headland, Smiths Bay, Hudson's Straights, Mandlins Sound, Fair Haven, and the like marks and monuments of their undertakings. Nothing achieved of publick moment but the Discovery of an Island called Cherry Island in the Latitude of 74, and the shores of a large piece of the Continent, which they caused to be called King James his New-Land, most commonly Greenland; where they found many white Bears, with white, grey, and dun Foxes, Partridges, Geese, and some other Provisions, Sea Unicorns Horns, great store of Morses, (or Sea-horses) the Oyl, and Teeth whereof yield no small commodity. But most considerable for the Trade of Whale fishing, which our men use yearly upon those Coasts; of whose Oyl, Bones, and Brain (this last supposed to be the true Sperma Ceti, now used as Medicinal) they raise very great profit.

3. The NORTH-EAST parts of Terra Incognita Borealis, are those which lie on the North of Russia and Tartary, by which the like passage towards Cathay and China hath been oft attempted; and hitherto with like success. Endeavoured first by Sebastian Cabot, the son of John Cabot, so often mentioned before, by whom trained up in the Discovery of the North-east parts of America. His employment failing here in England, he betook himself unto the service of the King of Spain; and coming out of Spain, An. 1549. was by King Edward the sixth made Grand Pilot of England, with an Annual Pension of 1661. 13s. 4d. In the year 1553 he was the chief Dealer and Procurer of the Discovery of Russia, and the North-east Voyages, undertaken and performed by Sir Hugh Willoughby, Chancellor, Burroughs, Jenkinson, and after prosecuted by Pet and Jackman. Some of which perished in the Action, and were frozen to death; their ship being found the next year hemmed about with ice, and a particular account of all things which had hapned to them. Others with better fortunes found the way to Russia (since that time made a common Voyage, without dread or danger) and passing down the Volga to the Caspian Sea, and by that to Persia, were kindly entertained in the Court of the Sophy. The Hollanders in the year 1594, and in some years after, tried their Fortune also, under the conduct and direction of one William Barendson, their chief Pilot; but went no further than the English had gone before them; yet gave new names unto all places as they passed, as if they had been the first Discoverers; with pride and arrogance enough. Nothing since done of any note or consideration for the opening of this North-east passage, or giving us any better account of the North of Tartary, or any Countries beyond that, but what we had many ages since out of Paulus Venetus, so that we are but where we were, in a Terra Incognita. And though I would not willingly discourage any noble Actions, or brave and gallant undertakings; yet when I look upon the nature of those Shores and Seas, those tedious Winters of ten months, with no Summer following; the winds continually in the North, and the Main Ocean paved with Ice so long together: I cannot chuse but rank the hopes of these Northern Passages amongst those Adventures which are only commendable for the difficulties presented in them.

TERRA

TERRA AUSTRALIS INCOGNITA.

Terra
Australis.

With better hopes we may go forwards on the next Discovery, and try what may be done on TERRA AUSTRALIS, or the Southern Continent, though hitherto INCOGNITA also, almost as much unknown as the Arctic Islands, which none but my good Friar of Oxon had the hap to meet with. A Continent conceived by our learned Brerewood, to be as large as Europe, Asia, and Africa; and that upon such strength of reasons, as cannot be easily over-born by any opposite. His Arguments in brief are these, 1. That as touching Latitude, some parts thereof come very near to the Aequator, if they come not also on this side of it: and as for Longitude, it keepeth along, though at several distances, the whole continual course of the other Continents. 2. It is clearly known, that in the other two Continents, the Land which lyeth on the North-side of that Line, is four times at the least as large as that which lies South thereof; and therefore since the earth is equally poised on both sides of her Center, it must needs be that the Earth in answerable measure and proportion must advance it self in some places above the Sea, on the South-side of the Line, as it doth in others on the North. By consequence, what is wanting in the South-parts of the other two Continents, to countervail the North-parts of them, must of necessity be supplied in the Southern Continent.

The Country being so large, so free from the Incumbrances of Frosts and Ice, and endless Winters; I have oft marvelled with my self that no further progress hath been made in Discovery of it: considering chiefly by the site and position of the Country, especially in those parts which lie nearest Asia, that there is nothing to be looked for elsewhere, either of profit or of pleasures, but may there be found. Whether it be, that there is some Nil ultra put to humane endeavours, or that this people are not yet made ripe enough to receive the Gospel; or that the great Princes of the Earth think it no good Policy to engage themselves in New Discoveries till the Old be thoroughly planted, and made sure unto them; or that the Merchant, who in matters of this nature hath a powerful influence, thinks his hands full enough already; and being fettered in so many and so wealthy Factories, will not adventure upon more. Which of all these, or whether all of these together be the cause of this stop, I am not able to determine. Certain it is that here is a large field enough for Coverousness, Ambition, or desire of glory to spend themselves in; enough to satisfy the greatest and most hungry appetite of Empire, Wealth, and Worldly pleasures; besides the Gallantry and merit of so brave an Action. Most which hath hitherto been done in it, hath been by the encouragements of the Vice Royes of New Spain and Peru: by the first of which we came acquainted with the Coasts of Nova Guinea; by the latter, with those Countries called the Island of Solomon; but whether Continents or Islands, not yet fully known.

And yet we must not rob Magellanus of his part of the honour, who passing thorow the Straights, which now bear his name, discovered those parts of it, which from the first thence seen he called Terra del Fuego, found by the Hollanders of late under James le Maire to be an Island. Nor do the English or the Dutch want their parts herein, though what they did, was rather Accidental, than upon Design. For in the year 1593. Sir Richard Hakluyt being bound for the Straights of Magellan, was by a cross wind driven on some parts of this Continent, to which he gave the name of Hankins his Malden Land; A Promontory of it shooting into the Sea with three points, he called Point Tremontain; and a pleasant Ile not far off, by the name of Fair Island. Saying along these Coasts in the 50 Degree of Southern Latitude, for the space of 60 miles and upwards, he found the Country as he passed to be very pleasant; and by the fires which he saw in the night to be well inhabited. By the like accident, Anno 1599. Sibald de Weert, a Hollander, in his return from the Straights of Magellan, fell upon some Islands of this Southern Continent, in the Latitude of 50 Degrees and 40 Minutes, which he caused to be called Sibalds Islands. And besides these we owe to the Portugals the discovery of such parts hereof, as they fell on in their way to the Eastern Indies; of which we have little but the names, as Pitacorum Terra, so called from the abundance of Parrats which they saw on the Coasts, over against the Cape of good Hope. 2 Beach, a Region yielding Gold, and possessed by Idolaters; with the two Kingdoms of 3 Luach, and 4 Maletur; all three against the Isles of Java, from which little distant.

But the greatest light we have to see by into this dark business, is by the Voyages and Adventures of the Spaniards, employed by the two Vice-Royes of Peru and Mexico, as before was said. For in the year 1543, the Governour of New Spain then being, sent Villa Lobos with a Fleet towards the Moluccos, who in that Voyage made a Discovery of a rich and flourishing Country which he named Nova Guinea, by others since his time called Terra de Piccinicoli; and in the year 1563. Castro the Licentiate, then Vice-Roy of Peru, sent a Fleet from Lima, which under the conduct of Lopes Garcia de Castro, discovered the Islands of Solomon. To which if we subjoin the success of the Hollanders in the Discovery of Fretum le Maire, and the Lands adjoining; The best Description we can make of this Southern Continent, must be in the Chorography and History of their Adventures; viz. 1 Terra del Fogo, 2 Insula Solomonis, 3 Nova Guinea: beginning first with Terra del Fogo, because nearest to us.

1. TERRA DEL FUEGO, lies on the other side of the Straight of Magellan, heretofore thought to be a part of Terra Australis Incognita, or the Southern Continent, but is now discovered to be an Island by one Jacob Mayr of Amsterdam, accompanied by Cornelius Schouten of Horn, both Hollanders. They began their Voyage on the 15 of June, Anno 1615. and on the 19 of January following they fell even with the Straight of Magellan. On the 24 of the same Month they had the sight of another Streight, which seemed to separate this Terra del Fuego from the rest of the Southern Continent; and on the 25 they entered into it. That part of the Land which (being entered into the Streight) they had on the West, they called Terra Mauritiæ de Nassau; that on the East Statenland; the Streight it self, Fretum le Maire. The entrance into the Streight they found to be in 55 degrees of Southern Latitude, and 50 Minutes; the waters running into the North-Sea with so violent an Eddie, ut adversum maris æstium difficulter superare possemus, saith he, who in the way of Journal or Ephemerides, hath described the whole course of this Voyage. In the whole course whereof nothing so much observable (besides this Discovery) as that they found that at their coming home they had lost a day (as must needs happen unto such, as in so tedious a voyage had travelled Westward) that being Saturday to them which was Sunday to the Hollanders, and the rest of Europe; though they had calculated the days since their going out with all exactness. So that if there were any such Morality in the Sabbath, as some men pretend, these men must either keep their Sabbath on a different day from the rest of their Countrymen; or otherwise to comply with them, must be guilty of the breach of the Sabbath, all the rest of their lives. But of this more at large elsewhere. To return therefore to this Streight, it is said to be seven Dutch miles, or 28 of ours in length, and of a fair and equal breadth; plentifull of good fish; especially of Sea-Calves and Whales. About the inferting of which Streights into the third Edition of my Microcosm, I received a Letter at such time as the Parliament was held in Oxon, An. 1625 subscribed G. B. and a little under that, Sub grunda floridum: which whether it were the Gentlemen Motta or the Anagram of his name, I am not able to say, having never heard more of him from that time forwards, though his desires were satisfied in the next Edition of that work. "For my encouragement wherein, he gave me this direction following, The News (saith he) of this New Streight coming in to Spain, it pleased that King in the year 1618 to fend and search whether the truth were answerable unto the Report. And finding it to be much broader than the other, and not above seven Dutch miles long; decreed, that being the more easie and compendious way for Navigators, and less subject to dangers, his Auxiliary Forces should be sent that way into the East-Indies, to defend the Philippine and Molucco Islands, and the way by the Cape of good Hope to be left: In regard that every such voyage, requireth twice as much time: besides the variety of winds, and often change of the Air, not only troublesome, but full of diseases, consumeth the one half of the men before they return: Whereas this way gaineth time (and if need be, they may dispatch business in the West as they travel into the East) without any extraordinary danger or losse of men. So far the very words of my letter. The intelligence given me in this Letter, I find confirm'd in a Relation of the Voyage made by Captain Don Juan de More, Anno 1618. at the command and charge of the King of Spain, who presently arm'd and furnish'd eight tall ships to fend this new way unto his Philippines and Moluccos, under the conduct of Petrus Michaelis de Cordelen. Since it hath been found by experience, that even from our parts to the Moluccos, through this Fretum de Maire, is but a passage of eight moneths: Sine ulla insigni navigantium clade, saith the Narrator. But of this Streight enough, to satisfy my unknown well-willers request, and inform my Reader: extremely sorry that the Gentleman was not pleased to impart his name, that so his memory might have lived in these Papers, if they themselves be destinate to a longer life.

Now for the nature of the soil, it is said to be very full of Mountains; but those Hills apparelled with woods, intermixt with Vallies; the Vallies for the most part full of little Brooks which fall down from the Mountains, and afford good pasturage; the Sea-coasts well provided of Bays and Roads, not unsafe for shipping: though the Air everywhere, but chiefly near the Sea, be much subject to Tempests. As for the People, they are said to be of a white complexion; but their Face, Arms, and Thighs, coloured with a kind of Oker: of full stature and well-proportioned, their hair black, which they wear long to seem more terrible. The men most generally naked, the women only shaded on their secret parts with a piece of Leather.

Towns they have none, nor any Habitations which deserve the name of houses; so that the most which we can doe is to Coast the Island. In which we find towards Mare del Noort, 1. A large Arm of the Sea, called Entrado de S. Sebastian. 2 The Cape of S. Ives. 3 Mauritius Island. 4 Promontorio de Buen Suceso, or the Cape of Good Success. Opposite whereunto in another Island is the Cape of S. Bartholomew; and betwixt them the Streight called Fretum le Maire. Then in the New South Sea, as they call it, there are 5 Barnvelt's Island. 6 The Islands of S. Idelfonso. 7 Cape Horn on a fair Promontory, in the South-west end, which doubled, the Country goes along with a strait shore, on which I find some Bays and Capes, but no names unto them; till we come to the Western entrances of the Streight of Magellan, opposite unto Cape Victoria, so often mentioned.

2. INSULÆ SOLOMONIS, or the Islands of Solomon, are situate on the West of Terra del Fogo, 11 degrees on the South of the Equinoctial. Discovered in the year 1567. by Lopez Gracia de Castro, sent by the Vice-Roy of Peru to find our new Countries. By whom thus named, in hope that men would be rather induced to inhabit in them; imagining that Solomon had his Gold from these Lands of Ophir.

In number they are many, but 18 the principal: Some of which 300 miles in compass, others 200, and others of them less, till we come to fifty, and beneath that, none. All liberally furnished with Dogs, Hogs, Hens, Cloves, Ginger, Cinamon, and some veins of Gold. The chief of these eighteen are; 1 Guadalcanal, supposed to be the greatest of them; upon the coast whereof the Spaniards failed 150 Leagues, where they found a Town which they burned and sacked, because the people of it in a sudden surprize, had killed fourteen of their men. 2 S. Isabella 150 leagues in length, and and 10 in breadth; the Inhabitants, some black, some white, some of brown complexion. 3 St. Nicolas, 100 Leagues in compass, inhabited by a People which are lack of hue, but said to be more witty than the other Salvages. All of them situate betwixt the Streights of Magellan, and the Islands of Theories; and yet not well agreed upon amongst our Authors, whether to be accounted Islands, or a part of the Continent: The Spaniards having failed 700 Leagues on the Coasts hereof, and yet not able to attain unto any certainty. But being they pass generally in account for Islands; and by that name are under the Vice-Roy of Peru, who appoints their Governours, let them pass so still.

3. NOVA GUINEA, lyeth beyond the Islands of Solomon; in respect of us, proceeding as we have begun from the Land of Fire. Discovered, as before was said, An. 1543. by Villa Lobos (Herrera attributes the discovery of it to Alvarez de Saavedra, and sets its higher in the year 1527.) more perfectly made known, if I guess aright, by Ferdinando de Quir. Who being sent with two Ships to make a more full discovery of the Islands of Solomon, and taking his course about the height of the Magellan Straights, discovered a main Land coming up close to the Equinoctial, on the Coasts whereof he failed 800 Leagues, till he found himself at last in the Latitude of 15 Degrees, discovering a large Bay into which fell two great Rivers, where he purposed to settle a Plantation, and to that end presented a Petition to the King of Spain. This Country I conceive by the site and position of it to be Nova Guinea, coming up close as that doth, to the Equinoctial; and after turning to the South towards the Tropick of Capricorn, where it joyneth with Maletur. And taking it for granted, as I think I may, I shall afford the Reader this Description of it, out of his Memorials, in which it is soberly affirmed to be a Terrestrial Paradise for wealth and pleasures. The Country plentifull of Fruits, Coco-nuts, Almonds of all sorts, Pom-citrons, Dates, Sugarcanes, and Apples: plenty of Swine, Goats, Hens, Partridges, and other Fowl, with some Kine and Buffals. Nothing interior (as it seemeth) to Guinea, in the Land of Negroes; and from thence so named. For as he saith, he saw amongst them Silver and Pearls, and some told him of Gold; the Countries on the Coast seeming to promise much felicity within the Land. The Air he found to be whole and temperate, the Sea-shores to be full of Baies, Havens, and the Exits of Rivers, making shew as of another China. The Inhabitants he affirmeth to be innumerable, some white, some like the Mulattos, others like the Negroes; diversified in Habit, as well as Colour. Their bread made of three sorts of Roots: without Government, but not without Religion; for they had their several Oratories and places of burial, but neither King, nor Laws, nor Arts. Divided by that want, and in dayly wars with one another; their Arms, Bows, Arrows, and other weapons, but all made of wood. Of this Country, whatsoever it was (if not Nova Guinea) he took possession in the name of the Catholicke King, and set up both a Cross and a Chappel in it; the Chappel dedicated to the Lady of Loretto.

The precise time of this Discovery I have nowhere found, but that the time spent about it is by him affirmed to be 14 years, to the no small endamage of his health and fortunes. Nor do I find that any care was taken of his Petition, or any thing else done by others in pursuance of his Propositions. Whether it were on any of the reasons before laid down; or that there was no credit given to his affirmations, I determine not. Nor find I that he gave any names to the Baies or Promontories, as he passed along; but either took such names as were given before, or found not any thing worth the naming. And for such names as were given before (till taking Ferdinando Quir's new Country for Nova Guinea) we find a Promontory called Cape Hermoso, in the East parts hereof near the Islands of Solomon, and not far from the Equator. 2 Another in the Western part, but as near the Equinox, called Point Primiro. A third in the first bendings of the Coast towards the South, called Cape de Buena D. fenda, or the Cape of good desires, 4 Rio de Valcanes, 5 Rio de Lorenzo, 6 Rio de S. Augustino, on the East of Cape Formoso towards the Straights, 7 The Rivers of S. Peter, 8 S. Paul, 9 S. Andrew, And 10 S. James, betwixt Cape Formoso and Primiro.

But being there is little certain of these last discoveries, and the greatest certainty we have of that little, is nothing but a List of names without any thing observable in the state and story of the same, they may still retain the old name of Terra Incognita. And therefore I will try my fortune, and without troubling the Vice-Roy of Peru, and Mexico, or taking out Commission for a new Discovery, will make a search into this Terra Australis for some other Regions, which must be found either here or nowhere. The names of which, 1 Mundus alter & idem, 2 Utopia, 3 New Atlantis, 4 Fairy Land, 5 The Painters Wives Island, 6 The Lands of Chivulry, And 7 The New World in the Moon.

1. MUNDUS ALTER ET IDEM, another world, and yet the same, is a witty and ingenious invention of a learned Prelate, writ by him in his younger dayes (but well enough becoming the austerity of the gravest head) in which he distinguisheth the Vices, Passions, Humours, and ill Affections most commonly incident to mankind, into several Provinces; gives us the Character of each, as in the descriptions of a Country, People, and chief Cities of it: and sets them forth unto the eye in such lively colours, that the vicious man may see therein his own Deformities, and the well-minded man his own imperfections, translated afterwards into English, and called (as I remember) the Description of Tenterbeley. The Scene of this design laid by the Reverend Author in this Terra Australis; the Decorum happily preserved in the whole Discovery; the stile acutely clear, the invention singular. Of whom and his New World I shall give you that Eulogie, which the Historian doth of Homer, Nec ante illum quem ille imitaretur, neq. post illum qui eum imitari posset, inventus est.

2. UTOPIA is a Country first discovered by Sir Thomas More, after Lord Chancellor of England; and by him made the Scene of a Commonwealth, which neither Solon, nor Lycurgus, nor any of the Legislators of former times did ever dream of; nor had been fancied by Plato, Aristotle, Tully, or any who have written the Idea's of a form of Government, though not re-lucible to practice. Some of his Plots we have took notice of already, as viz. his device to bring Gold and Silver into contempt by making making of those metals, Chains and Fetters for their Malefactors, Pans of Close-stools, Chamber-pots and Vessels of such unclean use; by imposing it as a penalty on infamous persons, to wear Gold Rings upon their Fingers, and the like devices: as also his device to prevent mistakes and dislikes in marriages, by giving the parties a full view of each other naked. Many more projects of this nature, some of them possible enough, but so unpracticable, so beyond hope of being looked on in the modelling of a Commonwealth, that we may reckon this device amongst those strange fancies, que nunquam antea spe concepta, nendum opere tentantur. The man indeed (considering the times he lived in) of rare abilities; but this Utopia fitted only to the Meridian of this Southern Continent, this Terra Australis Incognita, in which now we are, and to no place else.

3. NEW ATLANTIS is an Island of this Southern Continent discovered by Sir Francis Bacon, the learned Viscount of S. Albans; one of Sir Thomas Mores successors in the place of Lord Chancellor, but far before him in the Excellency and feasibility of his invention. It had this name with reference to Atlantis, an Island of the Western or Atlantic Ocean, mentioned in the Works of Plato, both alike invincible. But for his falling on this Island, his description of it, the City of Ben-Salem, and the manner of his reception there, such handfom probabilities, and so fairly carried, that to one not acquainted with the State of the World, it would seem a Reality. But above all things, the inventions and designs of Solomons House, for perfecting the works of nature, or rather improving nature to the best advantages of life, and the benefit of mankind, are beyond comparison. The man I must confess had his personal errors (I know none without them) of good and bad qualities equally compounded, Mores ejus vigore & levitate mixtissimi, as Paterculus once said of Piso: not one amongst many thousands (so pursue that Character) qui aut otium validius diligit, aut facilius sufficit negotio. A man of a most strong Brain, and a Chymical Head. Who if he had been entertained with some liberal Salary, abstracted from all Affairs both of State and Judicature, and furnished with sufficiency both of means and helps, for the going on in his design, would, I am confident, have given us such a body of natural Philosophy, and made it so subservient to the publick good, that neither Aristotle or Theophrastus amongst the Ancients, nor Paracelsus, or the rest of our later Chymists, would have been considerable.

4. FAERIE LAND, is another part of this Terra Incognita; the habitation of the Faeries, a pretty kind of little Fiends, or Pigmy Devils, but more inclined to sport than mischief; of which old Women, who remember the times of Popey, tell us many fine stories. A cleaner and more innocent cheat was never put upon poor ignorant people, by the Monks and Friars. Their habitation here or nowhere, though sent occasionally by Oberon and their other Kings to our parts of the World. For not being reckoned amongst the good Angels, nor having malice enough to make them Devils (but such a kind of midling Sprites, as the Latines call Lemures Larvae) we must find out some place for them, neither Heaven or Hell, and most likely this. Their Country never more enobled, than by being made the Scene of that excellent Poem, called the Faerie Queen. Intended to the honour of Queen Elizabeth, and the greatest persons in her Court: but shadowed in such lively colours, framed so exactly by the Rules of Poesie, and representing such Ideas of all moral goodness, that as there never was a Poem more Artificial; so can no Ethical discourse, more fashion and inflame the mind to the love of virtue. Invisurum facilius aliquem quam imitaturum, shall be Spencers Motto; and so I leave him to his rest.

5. The PAINTERS WIVES ISLAND, is an Island of this Tract, mentioned by Sir Walter Raleigh, in his History of the World. Of which he was informed by Don Pedro de Sarmineto, a Spanish Gentleman, employed by his King in planting some Colonies on the Streights of Magellan, (which we have touched upon before) who being taken prisoner by Sir Walter in his going home, was asked of him about some Island which the Maps presented in those Streights, and might have been of great use to him in his undertaking. To which he merrily replied, that it was to be called the Painters Wives Island, saying, that whilst the Painter drew that Map, his Wife sitting by, desired him to put in one Country for her, that she in her imagination might have an Island of her own. His meaning was, that there was no such Island as the Maps presented. And I fear the Painters Wife hath many Islands and some Countries too upon the Continent in our common Maps, which are not really to be found on the strictest search.

6. The LANDS OF CHIVALRIE are such Islands, Provinces and Kingdoms, in the Books of Errantry, which have no being in any known part of the World, and therefore must be sought in this. A gross absurdity, but frequent in those kind of Writers, who in describing the Adventures of their Knights, in despite of Geography (with which indeed they had no acquaintance) have not only disjoyned Countries which are near together, and laid together Countries which are far remote; but given us the description of many Islands, Provinces, and mighty Kingdoms, which as the ingenious Author of the History of Don Quixot, merrily observeth, are not to be found in all the Map. Of this sort is the Isle of Adamantis in Sir Huon of Burdeaux; the Firm Island in the History of Amadis de Gaul; the hidden Island, and that of the Sage Aliant in S. Palmerin of England; the Islands of Lindaraza, and the Devillish Fauna, with the Kingdom of Lyra (of which the Amazonian Lady Archiflora was the rightful Queen) and many others of that kind in the Mirror of Knighthood; and divers of like nature in Palmerin de Oliva, Primalison, and Belianis of Greece, Parismus, the Romance of Romanes, and indeed who not of all that Rabble? Handfomely humoured by Michael de Cervantes in his Island of Barataria, of which the famous Sancho Panca was sometimes Governour, and the Kingdom of Micomicona, the Queen whereof was as handfomely personated by the discreet Lady Dorothea. And yet I cannot but confess (for I have been a great Student in these Books of Chivalry) that they may be of very good use to Children or young boyes in their Adolescence. For besides that they divert divert the mind from worse cogitations, they perfect him that takes pleasure in them in the way of reading, beget in him an habit of speaking, and animate him many times to such high conceptions as really may make him fit for great undertakings.

7. The NEW WORLD IN THE MOON, was first of Lucians discovering; a man of eminent parts, but as ill a conscience, apotatizing from the faith in which he was bred. Aristophanes had before told us in one of his Comedies of a Nephelococcygia, or a City of Cuckoes in the clouds. But Lucian was the first who found out this New World in the Moon; of which, and of the Inhabitants of it, he affordeth us in one of his Dialogues a conceited Character. But of late times, that world which he there fancied, and proposed but as a fantie only, is become a matter of a more serious debate: and some have laboured with great pains to make it probable, that there is another World in the Moon, inhabited as this is by persons of divers Languages, Customs, Policies, and Religions: and more than so, some means and ways proposed to consideration for maintaining an intercourse and commerce betwixt that and this. But being there are like endeavours to prove that the Earth may be a Planet, why may not this Southern Continent be that Planet, and more particularly that Moon, in which this other World is supposed to be? Certainly there are stronger hopes of finding a New World in this Terra Australis, than in the body of that Planet; and such perhaps as might exceed both in profit and pleasure the later discoveries of America.

But I am no discourager of industry and ingenuity, which I love and honour wheresoever I find it. I know great Truths have many times been started upon less presumptions. Nor would I be mistook, as if in my pursuit of this Terra Incognita, I put a scorn on any of sublimer thoughts; or that I would have any man so much in love with the present World, as not to look for another World in the Heaven above. It is reported, that in some controversy betwixt the Polander and the Duke of Muscovie, the King of Poland sent the Muscovite a curious Globe, representing the whole Heavenly Bodies, with the particular motion of each several Sphere. To which the Muscovite returned this unworthy answer, Tu mihi Cœlum mittis, aut reddo mihi Terras de quibus contendimus; You send me Heaven, saith he, but that will not satisfy, unless you give me back those Lands which are now in question. And much I fear there are too many of this mind, who would not lose their part on Earth for all Heaven it self. Whom I desire, if any such peruse these Papers, to consider, that as much as the most flourishing Country which is here described, doth fall short of that Paradise wherein God placed our Father Adam, so much and infinitely more did that Earthly Paradise fall short of the unspeakable glories of the Kingdom of Heaven. To the diligent and careful search of which Heavenly Kingdom I heartily commit the Reader: not doubting but the Works of GOD which are here presented, and that vicissitude of humane affairs which is herein touched at, may prompt him to some serious thoughts of that mighty GOD who made all these Works, in whom is no shew nor shadow of change. To whom be given all Glory, both in this World, and that to come.

*Quicquid enim Lunæ gremio complectitur Orbis,
Permutat variâque vices, trepidoque tumultu
Æstuat, & nunquam sentit pars una quietem.
Nam ruit in sese, & civili vulnere semper
Aut cadit, aut perimit; aliâque renascitur ore,
Rursus ut intereat; sic non est omnibus unum
Partitus ingenium, non vis nativæ. Sed Orbes

A gross absurdity, but frequent in those kind of Writers, who in describing the Adventures of their Knights, in despite of Geography (with which indeed they had no acquaintance) have not only disjointed Countries which are near together, and laid together Countries which are far remote; but given us the description of many Islands, Provinces, and mighty Kingdoms, which as the ingenious Author of the History of Don Quixot, merrily observeth, are not to be found in all the Maps. Of this sort is the Isle of Adamant in Sir Huon of Burdeaux; the Firm Island in the History of Amadis de Gaul; the hidden Island, and that of the Sage Alant in S. Palmerin of England; the Islands of Lindaraca, and the Devilish Fauno, with the Kingdom of Lyra (of which the Amazonian Lady Archiflora was the rightful Queen) and many others of that kind in the Mirror of Knighthood; and divers of like nature in Palmerin de Oliva, Primallion, and Belianis of Greece, Parisimus, the Romance of Romanes, and indeed who not of all that Rabble? Handsomely humoured by Michael de Cervantes in his Island of Barataria, of which the famous Sancho Panca was sometimes Governour, and the Kingdom of Micomicon, the Queen whereof was as handsomely personated by the discreet Lady Dorothea. And yet I cannot but confess (for I have been a great Student in these Books of Chivalry) that they may be of very good use to Children or young boyes in their Adolescence. For besides that they divert the mind from worse cogitations, they perfect him that takes pleasure in them in the way of reading, beget in him an habit of speaking, and animate him many times to such high conceptions as really may make him fit for great undertakings.

7 The NEW WORLD IN THE MOON, was first of Lucians discovering; a man of eminent parts, but as ill a conscience, apostatizing from the faith in which he was bred. Aristophanes had before told us in one of his Comedies of a Nephelococcygia, or a City of Cuckoos in the clouds. But Lucian was the first who found out this New World in the Moon; of which, and of the Inhabitants of it, he affordeth us in one of his Dialogues a conceited Character. But of late times, that world which he there fancied, and proposed but as a fantasy only, is become a matter of a more serious debate: and some have laboured with great pains to make it probable, that there is another World in the Moon, inhabited as this is by persons of divers Languages, Customs, Policies, and Religions: and more than so, some means and ways proposed to consideration for maintaining an intercourse and commerce betwixt that and this. But being there are like endeavours to prove that the Earth may be a Planet, why may not this Southern Continent be that Planet, and more particularly that Moon, in which this other World is supposed to be? Certainly there are stronger hopes of finding a New World in this Terra Australis, than in the body of that Planet; and such perhaps as might exceed both in profit and pleasure the later discoveries of America.

But I am no discourager of industry and ingenuity, which I love and honour wheresoever I find it. I know great Truths have many times been started upon less presumptions. Nor would I be mistaken, as if in my pursuit of this Terra Incognita, I put a scorn on any of sublimer thoughts; or that I would have any man so much in love with the present World, as not to look for another World in the Heaven above. It is reported, that in some controversy betwixt the Polander and the Duke of Muscovite, the King of Poland sent the Muscovite a curious Globe, representing the whole Heavenly Bodies, with the particular motion of each several Sphere. To which the Muscovite returned this unworthy answer, Tu mihi Cœlum misisti, at redde mihi Terras de quibus contendimus; You send me Heaven, saith he, but that will not satisfy, unless you give me back those Lands which are now in question. And much I fear there are too many of this mind, who would not lose their part on Earth for all Heaven it self. Whom I desire, if any such peruse these Papers, to consider, that as much as the most flourishing Country which is here described, doth fall short of that Paradise wherein God placed our Father Adam, so much and infinitely more did that Earthly Paradise fall short of the unspeakable glories of the Kingdom of Heaven. To the diligent and careful search of which Heavenly Kingdom I heartily commit the Reader: not doubting but the Works of GOD which are here presented, and that vicissitude of humane affairs which is herein touched at, may prompt him to some serious thoughts of that mighty GOD who made all these Works, in whom is no shadow of change. To whom be given all Glory, both in this World, and that to come.

*Quicquid enim Lunæ gremio complectitur Orbis,
Permutat variatque vices, trepidoque tumultu
Æstuat, & nunquam sentis pars una quietem.
Nam ruit in sese, & civili vulnere semper
Aut cadit, aut perimit; aliisque renascitur ore,
Rursus ut intereat; sic non est omnibus unum
Partitus ingenium, non vis nativa. Sed Orbes
Astriferi, & nitidi sublimis Regia Cæli
Immunia senis, & vultu immutabilis uno
Perpetuum servat solida & sincera tenorem.*

The Verses are G. Buchanans, in his Book De Sphæra. Which I thus translate, and therewithall conclude this Work.

The World beneath the Moon its shapes doth vary,
And change from this to that; nor can it tary
Long in one state: but with it self doth jar,
Kills and is kill'd, in endless Civil War.
New form'd again, 'tis but to die. The frame
Neither of Bodies nor of Minds the same.
But That above the Spheres, the Heavens on high,
In which GOD reigns in glorious Majesty,
Free from Old Age, unchang'd, and of one face,
Alwayes presents it self in equal Grace.

Non nobis, Domine, non nobis, sed Nomini tuo detur Gloria.
